King Resigns, Giving Fusion Free Hand in Montgomery

Commissioner Admits He 'Made a Mistake' on Sligo Zoning.

Plummer Named As His Successor

(Pictures on Page 7.)

By Phillip J. Austensen.

The resignation of Montgomery County Commissioner Charles E. King has been accepted by Gov. Harry W. Nice, who has appointed Clay Plummer, one of the principal leaders in the 1932 Fusion campaign, to succeed him, the Governor told The Post last night.

Appointment of Plummer to the commissionership assures absolute control of the board of county commissioners by the Fusion Party, which has been kept in turmoil for several years by fears that King would jump to the Democratic organization. Plummer is an anti-organization Democrat.

A few hours before King's resignation became known he assured a delegation of citizens from the Sligo Valley section that he would move Thursday to reconsider rezoning of the tract adjacent to the Sligo Valley Park for apartment houses, which has been fought bitterly by the citizens. Previously King had voted to rezone the property but he said yesterday he had "made a mistake."

Backed by G. O. P.

Gov. Nice said last night that King's resignation was dated February 18.

"Appointment of Mr. Plummer was made upon recommendation of the Republican State central committee for Montgomery County," the Governor said.

Plummer is a Fusion Democrat and was one of the wheel-horses in the Fusion Party campaign in 1934 which captured three of the five places on the board of county commissioners and consequent control of nearly all of the patronage in the county.

Far-Reaching Effect.

The change on the board will have a far-reaching effect upon the political situation in Montgomery County. Plummer is a dyed-in-the-wool Fusionist and was one of the sponsors of the party four years ago. He is a bitter opponent of the Lee-Prescott Democratic organization machine in the county and his accession to the board is expected to provide, for the first time since formation of the present board, a solid front against the Democratic organization.

King several times has threatened to jump to the organization, and the two Republican members of the board, Frank H. Karn and Paul M. Coughlan, have been unable to count upon his support heretofore. Fusion appointees in the court-

Indiana Boosters Are Coming Here Ahead of McNutt

Indianapolis, Feb. 20 (AP).—Paul V. McNutt, United States High Commisioner to the Philippines, will leave here for Washington Tuesday, but Hoosier Democrats will be there before him to cheer his arrival.

McNutt, former Governor of Indiana, is on his way to Washington to discuss Philippine affairs with President Roosevelt. His friends have started a boom to win him the 1940 Democratic Presidential nomination.

Wayne Coy, McNutt's secretary, said they would leave Tuesday by train to arrive in Washington at 7:50 a. m. (Eastern standard time) Wednesday. Senator Minton (Democrat), Indiana, will give a reception for McNutt that afternoon.

A special train carrying Indiana Democrats to the reception will leave here late tomorrow to reach the Capital at 9:40 a. m. (Eastern standard time) Tuesday.

Gen. Electric And C.I.O. Sign Year's Contract

Agreement Affects 30,000 Workers, Puts Bar on Closed Shop.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 20.—A contract affecting 30,000 General Electric workers—the first to be reached by the company and a labor union—was announced tonight, making the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (C. I. O.) sole bargaining agent in six plants.

The General Electric Co. and the union announced the one-year agreement in a joint statement, and said it became effective when ratified by the union's General Electric locals.

It provides that employes of other plants, numbering another 30,000 workers, will be offered the same contract if the union is certified as sole bargaining agent for them.

Began Last Year.

Negotiations with the infant C. I. O. union, headed by 27-year-old James B. Carey, began less than a year ago after Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric, announced last March 3 his corporation was willing to negotiate with the C. I. O. on a country-wide basis.

The agreement bars both a closed shop and company unions; provides a procedure for adjusting disputes; stipulates the use of an impartial umpire; outlaws strikes and lockouts, and provides for the use of company bulletin boards by the union.

The contract does not contain a blanket wage increase which union spokesmen said a year ago would be included in their demands, but provides that the "Swope plan" relating to hours, wages and conditions of employment may be modified only through negotiations between the union and the company.

Robbery Turns Hunt to D.C. in Va. Kidnaping

Auto License of Maryland Suspects Same as That of Abduction Car.

Kidnapers of 18-month-old Nelson Booth, missing from his home on Porters Mountain, Va., since January 25, were sought in Washington last night as police broadcast a lookout for three persons following a postoffice robbery in Dickerson, Md.

Hunt for the kidnapers-robbers began when Maryland police asked Virginia State authorities to supply the name of the person owning a car with Virginia license plates. The numbers of the car tallied with those on an auto hunted by Virginia State police for the kidnaping of the Booth baby.

A safe in the combination postoffice at Dickerson was robbed of $60 last night. Residents of the town told police they had noticed a car with Virginia license plates in the vicinity. One of the citizens noted the license numbers.

Description of the trio and the car in which they were traveling tallied with information received by State Commonwealth's Attorney W. R. Saunder shortly after the kidnaping occurred.

The lookout named one suspect who was described as 22 to 25 years old, 115 pounds, slightly gray hair, gold tooth on right side of jaw and driving a 1926 model roadster.

The man was accompanied by another man and a woman, the broadcast said, both of whom were described as "about 22 years old."

The child, ill at the time of the kidnaping, was taken from his mother, Loreen Booth, by a woman on the pretext that she had been ordered to do so by a county official. The woman was said to have been accompanied by two "foreign looking persons."

Lewis Turns Down Invitation To Labor Department Dinner

By the Associated Press.

John L. Lewis won't break bread with William Green at the Labor Department's twenty-fifth anniversary dinner March 3.

That was disclosed yesterday when labor, industrial and social service leaders received invitations from Secretary Perkins.

Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, heads the list of speakers and also is listed as a "sponsor."

Lewis, chairman of the rival C. I. O., declined an invitation to speak and also would not allow the use of his name as a "sponsor." He informed Miss Perkins he would be out of town the night of the dinner.

Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Philip Murray, Lewis' first lieutenant, and David Dubinsky, president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, also are listed among the sponsors, however.

Among employers listed as sponsors were Edward R. Stettinius, jr., chairman of the United States Steel Corporation's finance committee; S. Clay Williams, head of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.; W. A. Harriman, chairman of the Union Pacific Railroad, and Owen D. Young, chairman of the General Electric Co.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Vice President Garner and Felix Frankfurter, Harvard law professor, also were on the list.

Carol Ousts Party Rule; Is Dictator

Bucharest, Feb. 20 (U.P.).—King Carol II tonight proclaimed a corporative state (staende state), abolishing political parties and setting up a government which, in effect, establishes a "royal dictatorship" throughout Rumania.

The move was made less than two weeks after Carol's announcement of a military dictatorship, and 24 hours after he had swept control of all civilian policing, except in purely criminal affairs, into the hands of the Rumanian army.

The King, in a proclamation, declared that the "rescue of the fatherland" was his motive for the new decree, which promulgates a new national constitution to be submitted to a plebiscite, probably on Thursday.

Equality Guaranteed.

The constitution, he said, will guarantee "equality before the law to all people of other races which have lived for centuries on Rumanian soil."

The proclamation said the constitution would provide for representation by workers, farmers and free professions in a new parliament, diminished in size, and "protected from dangerous political factions."

It was announced officially that the new constitution will include the following 10 points:

Civil rights of women will remain unchanged.

Legislative bodies will not be abolished.

Nationalism Stressed.

The national idea, and predominance of Rumanians occupying public positions will be stressed.

The duty of all Rumanians to work for the welfare of the fatherland will be emphasized.

Public morale will be strengthened and ministers in the future will not be permitted to hold financial interests in private business while working for the state.

A special corps of state officials will be created to "control" the honesty of the state administration."

Injustices against land owners will be rectified and sub-soil wealth will be given to the landowners.

Juries will be abolished in the courts and crimes will be tried by judges only.

Parliament "will build a new foundation and citizens will elect their representatives from professional groups."

"The individual will participate in public affairs according to his personal work and not according to the orders of political parties," it was announced.

Roosevelt Friend At Harvard Hurt In Tumble at Club

Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 20 (AP).—Alfred Bowditch Hallowell, young Harvard instructor and friend of Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., was seriously injured and Philip S. Weld, of Chicago, was hurt today in an accidental two-story fall at the exclusive Porcellian Club.

Dr. Elliott C. Cutler, prominent Bostonian who was at the club, said Hallowell suffered a possible fracture and brain concussion.

Weld's collarbone was fractured. Hallowell and Weld were "fooling around" at the club, Dr. Cutler said, when they suddenly plunged over a stair railing.

Berlin, Feb. 20.—Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler today warned nations with sizable German minorities on the borders of the new Reich to desist from "inflicting sorrow" on those peoples on the pain of possible conflict with his armed forces.

Pointedly, he told Great Britain she could have peace with Germany at the price of disgorging colonies she gained by World War victory.

In one of the greatest oratorical efforts of his meteoric career—a three-hour speech before the Reichstag and the diplomatic representatives of virtually all the world—he ranged over scores of points on foreign policy and domestic affairs.

But out of all the flood of words, there was no outright pledge to preserve—even technically—the independence of neighboring Austria, in which Nazidom took sweeping strides last week.

Recognizes Manchukuo.

Hitler's silence on that point was his only answer to a Europe that had wondered and hoped he would state definitely his intentions not only toward Austria but the German minorities in all central European countries.

The implied reference to next-door Czechoslovakia and other states with large German minorities came in Der Fuehrer's declaration he would insist the rights of those of German blood would be protected.

"To the interests of the German Reich belongs also the protection of those peoples of German origin who are not in a position through their own efforts to secure along the borders for themselves the rights to general, human, political and ideological freedom," he proclaimed from the stage of the Kroll Opera House.

Of Austria:

"I am happy to be able to tell you that during the recent days a further appeasement was achieved with a country which for many reasons is particularly close to us. . . . There now will be possible co-operation in political, personal and economic relations . . ."

Hitlers' announcement of recognition for Manchuko, the Japanese-dominated state sliced out of North China in 1931, emerged as the one concrete disclosure of Germany's manifold diplomatic maneuvers fol-

War-Lost Colonies Six Times as Great As Reich in Area

New York, Feb. 20 (AP).—Germany's war-lost colonies, whose return Chancellor Adolf Hitler demanded today, are almost six times the area of Germany in Europe. With their areas and present administrators, they are:

German East Africa, 370,000 miles; Belgian and British mandate.

German South West Africa, 322,400 square miles; Union South Africa mandate.

African Cameroons, 305,000 square miles; French and British mandate.

African Togoland, 34,439 square miles; Franch and British mandate.

Foe of Dictators Is Swept Out For Policy That Put Him In

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 20.—A slim, ashen-faced man moved nervously in and out of Whitehall's musty corridors tonight for the last time as the "chief," at least for the present.

He was 40-year-old Anthony Eden, who two years and two months ago was swept into office as his majesty's foreign secretary through refusal to compromise with Italy in Ethiopia—and today was swept out of office by refusal again to compromise with Italy, this time in the Mediterranean.

For two years and two months he had cut a white and shining swath across the dingy trails of European diplomacy.

Tonight it seemed he was leaving behind perhaps forever those little red tin dispatch boxes which hold the secrets of British foreign policy.

The whole thing hinged on this: Eden doesn't like dictators and dictators don't like him.

Eden can make an after-dinner speech in Persian, enjoy the psychological subtleties of Marcel Proust's writings, and dress as correctly as anyone in the world—the latter perhaps because his eccentric father liked to wear gray velvet knickerbockers and smoking suits made of gay silk handkerchiefs.

But even before fancy skater Sir Samuel Hoare skidded on the thin ice of the Ethiopian situation in December, 1935, and handed the foreign secretaryship over to Eden, "Tony" never got along with Mussolini or his comrade of the Rome-Berlin axis—Hitler.

Since then he has awed two premiers by the way he carried the world's cares on his jaunty shoulders—working 16 hours a day and making a "diplomacy's widow" of his pretty, peach-skinned wife.

It was back in March, 1935, that Eden as Lord Privy Seal first made himself Il Duce's public Antipathy No. 1.

ANTHONY EDEN.

At that time he stood in the awesome grandeur of the latter's big empty office and scolded him about Ethiopia. Il Duce snapped back that he didn't want any such schoolroom lecture.

It wasn't long then before Eden was whipping 52 nervous nations into the anti-Italian sanctions parade, and Italy was banning black "Eden" hats and changing the names of "Eden streets."

Hitler did not like Eden's diplomatic lectures any better.

Their differences concerned scraps Der Fuehrer tore from the Versailles Treaty, Germans whom Hitler sent to Spain, and other things just as serious.

Nazi newspapers soon got to calling him sneeringly "Der Eden Knabe" (Eden boy).

But Eden only smiled a pleasant, if faintly rabbit-toothed, smile and stuck by the foreign policy he enunciated in January, 1936.

It was: "We shall always be found arrayed on the side of a collective system against any government or people who seek by a return-to-power politics to break up the peace by that system we are seeking to create."

'Fists Fly as Japanese Riot In Diet on China War Control

Opposition to Konoye's 'Fascist-Like' Regime Flares; General Mobilization Bill Is Blocked; Press Calls Political Situation Very Tense.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Feb. 20.—Flaring opposition from Japan's major political parties to the government headed by Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye has blocked parliamentary discussion of the general mobilization bill and temporarily sidetracked introduction of important electric power control legislation.

Except for the newspaper Asahi, the press was unanimous in saying a very tense political situation prevailed after an outbreak of anti-government booing, shouting and fist fighting in the lower house of Parliament.

Some observers said the real issue between the government and Parliament was the Konoye regime's attempt to obtain Fascist-like control of Japan.

The general mobilization bill would expand the government's already broad control of industry and finance for prosecution of the war in China.

The actual disorder was precipitated last night by the government's manner of explaining a recent invasion of headquarters of the Minseito and Seiyukai, Japan's most prominent political parties.

Four hundred men described as "professional ruffians" made up an "anticomintern corps" which raided the parties' offices and were, expected to occupy them for 30 days, it was said, while Parliament discussed the power control and general mobilization bills.

Some members of Parliament expressed belief the name—"anticomintern corps"—was merely a blind for a scheme to help the government steamroller the bills into law. The 400 were said to have been paid 30,000 yen (about $8,700) by an "unknown source" for their trip to Tokyo from Saitama prefecture and their activities here.

Among "anticomintern corps" members arrested and later released was a man later found hanged in an orchard on the outskirts of Tokyo, apparently a case of suicide.

The near riot in the house followed a statement by Home Minister Admiral Nobumasa Suyetsugu, who heads the metropolitan police. Suyetsugu said simply: "I sincerely regret."

Then came the tumult of booing and shouting. Fist fighting between unidentified members developed around the rostrum of the House.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 20.—Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden quit the British cabinet today, taking with him Viscount Cranborne, the principal foreign undersecretary, in a dramatic break with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain on foreign policy.

Viscount Halifax, lord president of the council who started negotiations for settlement with Chancellor Adolf Hitler last November over the protest of Eden, was believed slated for the foreign secretaryship.

The resignation of Eden, who has opposed any British concessions to Europe's Fascist and Nazi dictators, was announced officially after the third extraordinary Sunday cabinet session, and several hours after Adolf Hitler struck out at Eden's foreign policy.

Some political observers regarded the cabinet crisis that brought about the resignation of both foreign secretary and undersecretary as the gravest since before the World War.

With the strong backing of young conservatives and adherents of the League of Nations, of which Eden was an ardent supporter, his resignation held the threat of a sharp party break possibly involving the discontinuance of the Chamberlain government.

Statements Today.

Both Eden and Chamberlain, at odds for weeks over Chamberlain's reported decision to come to terms with Germany and Italy, will make personal statements in the House of Commons tomorrow.

Their statements were expected to be the signal for a furious debate over the changes in foreign policy which the resignations signified.

Diplomatic quarters were stirred to unusual activity as Britain seemed to have veered to a completely new policy toward the Fascist and Nazi dictators.

Only today Eden had been singled out by German Chancellor Adolf Hitler for attack in his speech before the Reichstag. Prime Minister Benito Mussolini of Italy has long made the well-dressed Eden the target of his barbed criticism.

"Get Rid of Eden."

Eden has stood out in general against any compromise with dictators involving the sacrifice of the principles of collective security and in particular against negotiations for Anglo-Italian friendship without specific concessions from Mussolini.

Some well-informed quarters said Hitler and Mussolini had flatly warned Chamberlain he must get rid of Eden before any progress could be made toward a general European settlement.

The first European reaction to Eden's resignation came, significantly, from Germany in a wave of jubilation as the news spread.

Berlin Wants Halifax.

Cautious observers in Berlin were reluctant to state flatly that Hitler

Jackson Urges U. S. Economic Bill of Rights

Challenges 'Liberal Bar' to Guide Nation in Industrial Crisis.

Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson last night challenged a "liberal bar" to guide the Nation in its search for "an economic bill of rights that will protect our people from irresponsible exercise of economic power."

An economic bill of rights, he declared would include "collective bargaining for labor, the right to work free from industrial espionage, the ending of the oppression of starvation wages and sweatshop hours, the right of the willing to work, the right to a living when work is not available, and the right to some shelter from the cruelties of impoverished age."

Addressing the National Lawyers Guild, Jackson said the American bar of today has too often "frittered away" the proud heritage of leadership and courage handed down by the lawyer-statesmen of 150 years ago.

The call of the liberal movement for counsel is addressed to lawyers "free enough to think as part of the general structure, and to place commonwealth before wealth in their intellectual interests," he stated.

La Follette Speaks.

The Assistant Attorney General, whose nomination as Solicitor General now is pending before the Senate, and Senator Robert M. La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, were the chief speakers at the guild banquet, held in the Willard Hotel.

Declaring that "private initiative has shown itself unequal to the task before us," La Follette urged that the Federal Government "step in with public capital."

"The most casual survey of our natural and "human resources," according to the Wisconsin Senator, "discloses that not only the opportunity but the urgent demand for the productive investment of public capital are almost limitless."

Funds sufficient to finance such a program of Government spending can be furnished by broadening the tax base and adjusting rates to the ability to pay, La Follette asserted.

Soil conservation, housing, flood control and education were named by the speaker as productive fields for the investment of public funds.

Asks Leadership.

La Follette concluded with an appeal to forward-looking lawyers to furnish leadership in directing America's increased productive capacity to creation of "a better life."

Referring to the guild's growth during the past year, John P. Devaney, president of the group and former chief justice of Minnesota, said, "It would be dangerous to get in the way of this organization which shows so much power and vitality."

At an earlier session of the convention Henry Ward Beer, president of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, flayed as "interlopers" nonlawyers who represent clients before quasi judicial bodies in Washington.

W.C.T.U. Honors Frances Willard, Head for 50 Years

Local members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union paid annual tribute to Frances E. Willard yesterday on the fortieth anniversary of her death. Miss Willard was president of the national organization for nearly half a century.

Yesterday's ceremony was held at Miss Willard's statue in the Capitol. Among 30 local unions which sent delegates was the Georgetown chapter, founded in 1894 by Miss Willard.

In a eulogy of the temperance crusader, Representative John M. Robsion, of Kentucky, attributed her greatness to the fact that she worked for others rather than for herself. A wreath was placed on the statue after this talk.

D. C. Printers 3-1 For A.F.L. Leader

C. I. O. leadership for the International Typographical Union was repudiated yesterday by members of the Columbia Typographical Union in a vote for nomination of International officers.

By more than a 3-to-1 vote, the local organization indorsed Claude M. Baker, of San Francisco, who favors adherence to the A. F. of L., over Charles P. Howard, of Chicago, now International president and an official of the C. I. O.

New York 2 to 1 for Baker.

New York, Feb. 20 (AP).—By a vote of almost 2 to 1, Claude M. Baker, of San Francisco, A. F. L. proponent, won the indorsement of the local unit of the International Typographical Union today for the office of International president. Baker received 569 votes to 311 for Charles P. Howard, a C. I. O. official, the current president.

Coughlin Attacks Lawyer Lobbyists

Detroit, Feb. 20 (AP).—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin charged in a radio address today that the "ablest members" of the legal profession had been employed as Congressional lobbyists to "legalize profiteering, to protect organized banditry, to silence the voice of outraged labor and agriculture."

Father Coughlin said Congress had become "devoted to safeguarding the monopolies of finance and industry. Instead of being the mouthpiece and mind of millions of American citizens, Congress became the sounding board of the legal profession."

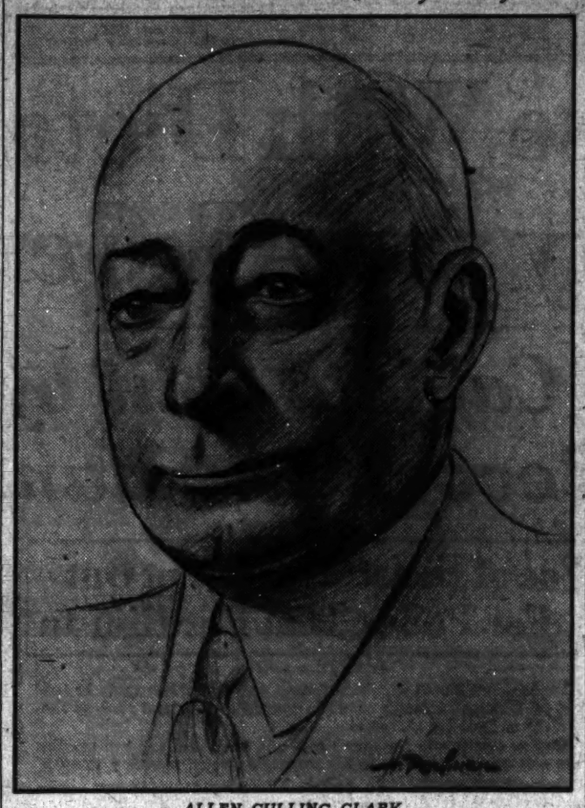
Clark Says Fair U. S. Budget Aid For D.C. Would Be $25,000,000



ALLEN CULLING CLARK.

By Christine Sadler

Ill feeling between the Federal Government and District residents is a growth of the last few years and is caused by budget disputes rather than desire for the ballot, in the opinion of Allen Culling Clark, veteran president of the Columbia Historical Society.

Tomorrow at midnight Clark will be 80 years of age. He can celebrate either on Washington's birthday or the twenty-third, so he usually compromises and celebrates both. He has been president of the Columbia society for 22 years and is one of the city's best known historians. What he says about District affairs, therefore, is no "hearsay".

"The District does not feel it has received a just treatment in the payment of Government costs. The $5,000,000 paid by the Federal Government is wholly inadequate. I do not think $25,000,000 would be an excessive Federal contribution," he declares.

Ballot Denial Unintentional.

From his study of Washington history he also is convinced that the District's planners had no intention of disfranchising residents of the area.

"It was never intendant, in my opinion, for there not to be suffrage here," he says.

As for a choice between so-called "local suffrage" and suffrage for national representation only, he believes there should be "full suffrage or none."

To him the question of District suffrage appears self-answered for all who believe in elective government. "I think we have some fine District officials but I happen to believe in elective government," he declares.

Visits Office Daily.

Clark was born in Philadelphia but has lived here since he was 5 years of age. He was graduated from National University in 1878 and began to practice law the following year. When the Equitable Life Insurance Co. was organized in 1885 he was made secretary and trustee, which positions he still fills. Walls of his office in the Equitable Building are lined with photographs of Washington scenes made in many different years and with paintings which are an overflow from the art collection at his home.

Although he maintains he has retired, he visits his offices every day and continues his historic research. He is writing no new book at this time, however. Among historical books he has written are "Greenleaf and Law in the Federal City," "Life and Letters of Dolly Madison," "Abraham Lincoln, the Merciful President," and "Origin of the Federal City."

He is a former member of the Washington Academy of Sciences and a member of other historical associations, including the Maryland Historical Society and the Mississippi Valley Historical Association.

Urges History on Young.

Clark is recognized as a logical, sound and effective thinker whose writings are accurate and interesting. He is modest and retiring but "has a fund of words ready when the occasion demands."

He would like to see a greater interest in the history of Washington but does not mind that there is no Washington history book in the public schools. "Those who are interested in it will have no trouble picking it up from books and records already available," he says. "Young persons should be interested in history probably more than they are for one understands the present better when he knows the past."

Wednesday—Otho Garnand, president of the Congress Heights Progressive Citizens Association, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

U.S. Minesweeper Runs Aground Off Alaska, All Safe

A tiny Navy minesweeper, the Swallow, with four officers and a crew of 40, came to grief in icy Alaskan waters yesterday, on the last leg of an errand of mercy, the Navy Department reported here.

Officers and crew were reported to have reached shore safely after their 840-ton vessel ran aground on Kanaga Island in the western Aleutians. The ship was taking a pharmacist's mate and cook to the Naval aerological station on the island, to replace two men who disappeared January 19.

Aboard the vessel were Pharmacist's Mate N. P. Stevenson and Ship's Cook Guy V. Stricklin. They were to replace Chief Pharmacist's Mate Royse R. Givson and Ship's Cook Clyde Musick, who vanished mysteriously on a hunting trip.

U.S. Unwilling To Risk a War, Report States

Public Against Use of Force in Orient, Says Research Group.

By the Associated Press.

The American public appears unwilling to risk war with Japan or involvement in Europe to protect China against aggression, said a report issued yesterday by the Foreign Policy Association.

Reviewing this country's role in the Far Eastern conflict, the report said the State Department had insisted upon observance of American rights in China, but had refused to risk the use of force.

"The success of any coercive measures—economic sanctions, naval demonstrations or 'long distance' blockade—would probably require readiness for a showdown in the Western Pacific, which the American public appears unwilling to face," added the summary written by Paul B. Taylor with the aid of the association's research staff.

Private Research.

The association is a private research organization.

"Despite this country's reluctance to use force," the report declared, "the 'midle-of-the-road' course has led distinctly away from isolationism. The traditional policy of protecting American interests abroad has been strongly re-asserted. The President's wide discretion to apply or withhold application of the neutrality act has been demonstrated.

"Confronted by the growing danger of a world war, the American Govetnment has, as a corollary to its trade agreements program aiming at 'peaceful change,' aligned itself more actively with Britain, France and other powers which oppose change of the status quo by force. It has shown support for international co-operation generally and has sought to discourage prospective aggressors by the threat of co-operation with powers which oppose them.

Opinion Divided.

"Whether this policy, if continued, will reduce the threat of a general war or merely hasten American entrance into such a war, are questions on which contemporary opinon remains sharply divided."

In another statement of foreign policy, Col. J. E. Myers, retired Army officer and director of the American Peace Movement Inc., proposed that Congress require the President to withdraw all vessels and troops from war zones in the Eastern Hemisphere.

Representative Fish (Republican), New York, issued a statement urging the public to insist that an international conference on naval disarmament be called immediately.

La Follette Hits Reorganization Measure's Foes

Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, declared yesterday it was foolish to say the pending Government reorganization bill would give the President "dictatorship" over governmental departments.

The statement to which he objected has been made by many foes of the measure.

The Wisconsin Senator said he would support the bill, which may be taken up by the Senate shortly, after it considers the $250,000,000 relief bill.

La Follette said he had "little patience" with contentions the bill would eliminate a check on Government spending by abolishing the Comptroller General's office and setting up an auditor general.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, who has been especially critical of that part of the bill, said he would seek to amend the measure when it reaches the floor. He predicted prolonged debate.

Alien C.I.O. Heads Coming to Capital

San Francisco, Feb. 20 (AP).—Harry Bridges and Harold Pritchett, West Coast C. I. O. leaders whose right to remain in the United States is under challenge, will converge on Washington this week in efforts to clarify their status.

Bridges, maritime labor leader and West Coast C. I. O. director, was en route East by train to demand a hearing before the Senate Commerce Committee.

Pritchett, president of the International Woodworkers Association, said in Seattle he would fly East tomorrow.

Green Assails Black Bill, Asks Uniform Wages

Labor and Industry Must Be Protected Against Bureaus, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, renewed his opposition to the Administration's wage-hour bill yesterday, advocating instead a law fixing uniform labor standards throughout the Nation.

In a statement to the press, Green said the A. F. of L. was against "delegating sweeping administrative powers to a Federal wage board or a Federal administrator."

The Senate-approved Administration bill, now being revised in an effort to overcome House opposition, would empower a Federal board to fix minimum wages at not more than 40 cents an hour and maximum working hours at not less than 40 a week.

"Labor and industry must be protected from a new tidal wave of bureaucratic regulations," Green asserted.

Opposing establishment of labor standard differentials for the various sections of the country, he said President Roosevelt had described the Nation properly as "an economic whole."

The federation submitted its proposal for a wage-hour bill at the special session of Congress, he recalled. Referring to that draft, he added:

"This law simply established minimum wage and maximum hour rates for the entire country. It provided quick punishment for violations through prosecution of violators in the Federal courts by the Justice Department."

Green said the federation would submit a new draft, incorporating a few minor modifications, to the House Labor Committee in the near future.

Graft Proof Asked In Davey Auto Deal

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 20 (AP).—The Senate investigating Committee sought tonight documentary proof to substantiate testimony of Lee Bradley, Cleveland asphalt salesman, that Gov. Martin L. Davey bargained with automobile manufacturers for campaign contributions.

Bradley, free on $500 bond after being arrested on a perjury charge filed by the Governor, indicated he would go to Cleveland to obtain bankbooks and photostatic copies of his income tax reports.

He told the committee that he thought these records would prove Democratic State Chairman Francis W. Poulson paid his $400 a month from January, 1935, until June, 1936.

These payments, he testified, represented "commissions" on sales which General Motors and Chrysler made to the State and which he helped arrange.

Report Places 1937 Relief Bill At 2 1-3 Billions

By the Associated Press.

The Nation's relief bill for 1937 was $2,333,314,000, exclusive of administrative costs, the Social Security Board reported yesterday.

This figure included outlays for Federal, State and local aid to the needy. It compared with $2,618,027,000 in 1936, the board said.

Officials said the cost of public relief in December was $194,000,000, an increase of about $12,000,000 over the total for November. There was a "significant" rise or nearly 21 per cent in general relief provided in December by States and localities, they added, while earnings under the Federal Works program increased slightly more than 4 per cent.

The board's report said 20 per cent of the estimated population 65 years of age or older received old age assistance in December in 47 States, the District of Columbia, Alaska and Hawaii.

Loening Resigns U. S. Air Post for Private Practice

Grover Loening, aeronautical adviser to the United States Maritime Commission since May, 1937, has resigned to re-enter private practice as an aeronautical consultant, the commission announced last night.

Loening, pioneer in aviation, directed the commission's recent survey on the relations of aircraft to development of the American Merchant Marine, and recommended that the merchant marine act of 1936 be extended to cover aircraft in overseas trade.

In resigning, Loening said that the commission's survey "has disclosed without contradiction, and with widely acclaimed approval, the potentialities of aircraft in transoceanic travel and the manner in which future giant aircraft will supersede the superliner."

E. H. Crump, head of the political organization at Memphis, who picked Chandler to succeed him when he gave up his Congressional seat at the end of the Seventy-third Congress, announced he was supporting Chandler "100 per cent."

Paris Charges Britain Yields To Hitler Axis

Resignation of Eden Held Surrender to Rome and Berlin.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Feb. 20.—Premier Camille Chautemps and Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos were said tonight to have informed Great Britain they considered the resignation of Anthony Eden a surrender to the Rome-Berlin axis of Fascist collaborators.

Informed circles said France considered it a surrender coming on the heels of Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's Reichstag speech which singled out the British foreign secretary by name for attack.

[At the same time, the government, alarmed by the possibility of a Nazi thrust into Czechoslovakia as result of Fuehrer Adolf Hitler's Reichstag speech, warned him officially it will "never tolerate" any attempt to annex foreign territories populated by German minorities, the United Press reported.—Editor's note.]

The French position was said to have been conveyed to Sir Eric Phipps, the British Ambassador to Paris.

Still Collaborate.

Diplomatic sources said the French foreign office hoped Eden's personal popularity and support of the House of Commons would bring him back into the cabinet quickly to rescue Franco-British diplomacy.

With Eden out of the foreign office, France feared she would be unable to keep Yugoslavia, Rumania and Czechoslovakia linked in a little entente guided by the powerful democracies—France and Britain.

Premier Chautemps himself showed how serious he considered the situation by going to the foreign ministry to talk with Delbos and France's crack career diplomats.

Four-Hour Conference.

After a conference of nearly four hours, Chautemps and Delbos summoned Phipps to the Quai d'Orsay so urgently he left dinner and arrived there still in his dinner jacket.

Following official confirmation of the resignations of Eden and his principal undersecretary, Viscount Cranborne, the premier returned wearily to his office.

Some diplomatic sources said "France must follow" if Britain adopts a conciliatory policy toward Rome and Berlin, a proposal which caused Eden's dramatic exit from Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's cabinet, or changes her policies in Spain.

The turn of events in London abruptly ended the "diplomatic" holiday of the French Ambassador to London, Charles Corbin.

Speeds to London.

Corbin hastily packed his bags and left for the British capital so as to arrive there tomorrow.

Chautemps and Delbos kept in touch with the London situation by telephone to the French embassy and between calls they studied the official text of Hitler's speech.

The chief interests of French officialdom in the Hitler speech were the Fuehrer's words on Spain and what was termed a "thinly veiled threat" against Czechoslovakia.

His statement that Germany and Italy stood together behind Spanish insurgent Generalissimo Francisco Franco was considered here as Hitler's reciprocation for Italy's approval of the recent German advance in Austria.

Only One Concern.

The only question in Paris was whether Hitler would back up his words by sending more support to the Spanish insurgents.

Hitler's announcement of recognition for Manchukuo and a reaffirmation of German support for Tokyo were viewed in the same "let's-wait-and-see" light.

A few hours before, Frenchmen knew what Hitler said, War Minister Edouard Daladier told a Radical-Socialist Party congress that adequate defense for France depended on ending social unrest.

Pounding the rostrum for emphasis, Daladier declared:

"Not only the soldier, sailor and aviator assure the defense of the nation, but also the intellectual engineer, worker and peasant.

Respect of Law.

"Only an increase in our production, maintenance of order in respect of laws, conciliation of interests and their submission to the general interest permit us to maintain and reinforce our alliances and friendships.

"Shall we permit the destruction of Europe's equilibrium? Is it possible to escape danger by letting the fire rage, by permitting a huge empire to be ground up—whose mass itself pushes toward hegemony?

"This is the concern of men who sincerely desire peace with all peoples of whatever political regime, but who cannot conceive of peace in servitude."

Then Daladier added he would say nothing further since "diplomatic negotiations were under way."

Eden's Resignation; Chamberlain's Reply

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 20.—The text of Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's letter of resignation to Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain follows:

My Dear Prime Minister:

The events of the last few days have made plain the difference between us on a decision of great importance in itself and far reaching in its consequences.

EDEN.

I cannot recommend to Parliament a policy wherewith I am not in agreement.

Apart from this, I have become increasingly conscious, as I know you have also, of the difference in outlook between us in respect to the international problems of the day and also as to the methods whereby we should seek to resolve them.

It cannot be in the country's interest that those who are called upon to direct its affairs should work in uneasy partnership, fully conscious of differences in outlook yet hoping they will not recur.

This applies with special force to the relationship between the prime minister and the foreign secretary.

It is for these reasons that with very deep regret I have decided I must leave you and your colleagues, with whom I have been associated during the years of great difficulty and stress.

May I end on a personal note?

I can never forget the help and counsel you have always so readily given me, both before and since you became prime minister.

Our differences, whatever they may be, cannot efface that memory or influence our friendship.

Yours ever, (Signed) ANTHONY EDEN.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 20.—The text of Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's letter of reply to the resignation of Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden follows:

My Dear Anthony:

It is with the most profound regret, shared by all our colleagues, that I have received your intimation of your decision to resign the great office which you have administered with such distinction ever since you have occupied it.

CHAMBERLAIN.

This regret is all the greater because such differences as have arisen between us in no way concern our ultimate aims or fundamentals of policy.

The decision which you find yourself unable to accept is whether the present moment is appropriate for commencement of Anglo-Italian conversations.

We had hoped you would not feel this of sufficient importance to necessitate a parting which is painful to all of us.

There has been so large a measure of agreement between us, not only on fundamental policy but on many practical applications of it, that I had hoped until a very short time ago that any difference of outlook whereto you allude would not be found incompatible with our further collaboration.

Since, however, your letter shows that unhappily this is not the case, I have no alternative but to accept your decision.

I will, accordingly, submit your resignation to His Majesty the King for his approval.

I should like to thank you very warmly for your loyal, helpful comradeship during all the time we have worked together, and assure you nothing which has happened has impaired my admiration of your gifts and my affection for yourself.

Yours sincerely,

(Signed) NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN.

London

had talked a British cabinet minister out of office but Nazis frankly welcomed Eden's elimination from the government. Dispatches from Berlin said that if Halifax succeeded Eden the way was open for a real Anglo-German agreement.

In Rome also the news of Eden's resignation was greeted jubilantly.

Eden will go to Buckingham Palace tomorrow to deliver his seal of office to King George, who returned unexpectedly from Windsor Palace in the midst of cabinet deliberations that were reminiscent of the abdication crisis that brought George to the throne.

In the event Halifax is named foreign secretary, the prime minister himself was expected to take over foreign affairs in the House of Commons. Halifax sits in the House of Lords.

The 40-year-old Eden, who had been foreign secretary for two years and two months, acknowledged his differences with Chamberlain in his letter of resignation. He was the youngest man in 84 years to direct British foreign policy.

The breach was opened when the prime minister started Anglo-Italian friendship negotiations with the Italian ambassador, Count Dino Grandi, February 18.

Thus Italian policy brought Eden into office as foreign secretary and forced him out.

Twenty-six months ago Eden succeeded Sir Samuel Hoare because Hoare, with Pierre Laval of France, tried to make a deal with Mussolini to give Italy a slice of Ethiopia.

Tonight Eden left the cabinet because he refused to compromise with Il Duce on a settlement in the Mediterranean.

Eden's retirement immediately after Hitler's attack on him, at a time when France was urging strong British support to resist Nazi advances in Central Europe, disturbed large sections of British public and diplomatic quarters alike.

Both Parties Roused.

There also was comment on the fact that Hitler bitterly attacked the League of Nations, through which Eden rose to prominence as the "White Knight of Geneva."

Both opposition party and conservative ranks alike were stirred by the cabinet split.

Maj. Clement Attlee, leader of the labor opposition in the House of Commons, declared immediately he would demand full dress debate in Commons tomorrow on all issues leading up to the crisis.

Censure Vote Weighed.

The Labor Party executive committee, he said, would meet in the morning to decide whether to demand a vote of censure on Chamberlain for apparently forcing Eden out.

Should enough conservative backers of Eden support the censure to make it a vote of lack of confidence, Chamberlain would be forced to resign with his entire cabinet or else "go to the country"—call a general election, seeking return to power of the Conservative Party on that issue alone.

Attlee predicted that Eden's departure would mean an "enormous loss of prestige to the government" and possibly would split the government majority.

He said that if Chamberlain's policy was to be "always giving away to dictators" it would be extremely damaging to "the safety of the British Empire."

Supporters of Eden said he had given the cabinet a flat ultimatum to accept either his foreign policy—co-operation with France against Fascist encroachment in Central Europe and the Mediterranean—or his resignation.

Eden Takes a Walk.

Eden had walked out on the second emergency cabinet session, remaining only four minutes before he returned to the foreign office on the other side of Downing street.

Eden looked pale and serious as he left the prime minister's official residence at No. 10 Downing street and went to the foreign office, where he met his departmental chiefs.

The crowds, jamming the little dead-end street, shouted:

"No pacts with Italy!"

Backed France to Limit.

The breach between Eden and his more conservative cabinet colleagues was understood to have come on the direct question of supporting France with a joint Anglo-French declaration to Hitler reaffirming the necessity for maintaining Austrian independence.

While Eden supported the French plea for diplomatic action to halt Germany, the other cabinet members were understood to be favoring an immediate settlement with Germany and Italy and British withdrawal from central European affairs.

Some quarters interpreted Hitler's speech today as an attempt to influence the British cabinet deliberations and get rid of Eden.

Hitler Veils Threat.

At one point of his speech Hitler said that if England was really anxious to defend herself she would energetically oppose the bolshevization of other countries which then "become sections of the Moscow revolutionary center.

"I know Mr. Eden does not share this view," Hitler said. "But Stalin does and openly admits it."

As Eden went before the cabinet the crowd in Downing street, in a scene reminiscent of the December, 1936, abdication crisis, cried out:

"Good old Eden! Stick to your guns!"

The crowd surged about him, cheering the whole length of the street.

Anthony Eden's Career

London, Feb. 20 (AP).—These are the highlights in the career of Anthony Eden, who resigned today as Britain's foreign secretary.

1897—Born June 12, the second son of Sir William Eden.

1915—Went from Oxford to war as captain in the King's Rifles.

1923—Elected to the House of Commons and married Beatrice Beckett.

1931—Made foreign undersecretary.

1935 (December)—Appointed foreign secretary, youngest in 84 years of British history.

1937—Developed Spanish non-intervention system and Nyon anti-piracy patrol; defied dictators' "houselop ultimatum" when calling for peace.

Fascists Hail Resignation.

Rome, Feb. 20 (AP).—Fascists tonight hailed Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's resignation from the British cabinet as the retreat of Italy's arch-enemy.

Regarded as the personification of British antifascism and the spirit of the League of Nations, few foreign statesmen ever have been so hated in Italy. None were ever more consistently lampooned in the Fascist press.

Italians were never permitted to forget Eden's leadership in the League of Nations' imposition of economic penalties against Italy as punishment for her invasion of Ethiopia.

When Eden's appointment was announced in December, 1935, the first reaction of one Fascist official was "this means war within three weeks."

Though his prediction was overly pessimistic the diplomatic war between the Fascist regime and the British foreign secretary seldom enjoyed a truce.

Government May Fall as Chamberlain Insists on Giving In.

New British Foreign Chief Expected to Speed Italian Amity.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 20.—Edward Frederick Lindley Wood, third Viscount Halifax, a recognized friend of Nazi Germany, was believed tonight to be the probable new foreign secretary succeeding Anthony Eden.

The lanky 56-year-old lord president of the council and House of Lords leader was expected to work with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain to effect a quick settlement of vital issues with Italy, irrespective of other problems such as Italian troops in Spain and Italy's anti-British propaganda campaign among Arab peoples.

Eden had demanded an understanding on these questions before initiating Anglo-Italian conversations.

Scholarly and almost bald, Lord Halifax has had a distinguished political career. He was Chamberlain's choice to carry the premier's overtures to German Chancellor Adolf Hitler last November.

pious, ale-drinking father who lived

Lord Halifax was the son of a to be 94.

Like his father, he is devoted to Yorkshire hunting, walking, books and his inherited estates.

He was known in India as the "Great Sahib" because of his successful viceroyship from 1926 to 1931.

During his administration Mahondas K. Gandhi, the leader of India's civil disobedience campaign, was arrested, but the little mystic remained the viceroy's friend.

Despite an attempt on his life in 1929 when a bomb wrecked the train coach next his, Lord Halifax had few enemies in India.

Hatred was reserved for him in his own country when opponents booed him upon his return because of his reforms which gave India a degree of self government.

He served in France with the Yorkshire Dragoons Yeomanry and was mentioned in dispatches for bravery.

He once said, "I would rather be master of a foxhunt than prime minister."

Austria Accepts Hitler Remarks As Satisfactory

Independence Is Already Pledged 'in Effect,' Officials Say.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Feb. 20.—The Austrian foreign office spokesman described Reichsfuehrer Hitler's reference today to Austrian-German collaboration as "satisfactory."

He announced, however, there would be no official comment before Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg speaks to Parliament Thursday.

Among some officials there was disappointment that Hitler failed to say explicitly that Austrian independence would be respected. Nevertheless, they pointed out he had promised it in effect by acknowledging the Austrian-German friendship accord of July 11, 1936.

Other circumstances pleasing to Austria were Hitler's warm thanks to the Austrian Chancellor and his avoiding mention of possible "anschluss" (union) or mention of the Austrian Nazi party, still technically illegal.

Hitler's address, relayed by Austrian radio, stirred enthusiasm among the Nazis and was heard with deepest interest by virtually the entire adult population of the nation. For the first time in history, Austrian stations broadcast the Horst Wessel song, Nazi marching air.

A Nazi field day was held at Graz after the speech. The throngs displayed its enthusiasm like an American football crowd, marching and singing and shouting: "Germany awakes! Austria awakes! One people and one empire!"

Vienna listened calmly to the speech, but by evening thousands of Nazis were on the streets, demonstrating without police interference. Officials, however, blocked all streets leading to the chancellery.

Czech Sovereignty Violated by Hitler, Officials Declare

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Feb. 20 (AP).—Adolf Hitler's speech to the German Reichstag was received today with disfavor in official circles of Czechoslovakia, which contains about 3,000,000 Germans within Versailles treaty-created borders.

Hitler's inferred reference to the German minority in Czechoslovakia was resented as "interference with the sovereignty of the Czechoslovakian state."

Hitler Disappoints Germans in China

Shanghai, Feb. 20 (AP).—Adolf Hitler's announcement today of recognition for Manchukuo, the state carved out of North China by Japan, caused sharp disappointment in Chinese commercial circles here.

The Chinese pointed out the prominent role German military advisers are playing in China's defense against Japan.

"The fact that China is obtaining considerable war supplies," they said, was likely to prevent the government from undertaking any opposition measures such as an anti-German commercial boycott. German businessmen in Shanghai had strongly opposed recognition for Manchukuo.

Japanese 'Cool' To Hitler Speech

Tokyo (Monday), Feb. 21 (U.P.).—First unofficial reaction to Adolf Hitler's speech here was one of restrained enthusiasm for defense of Japan's war in China, coupled with reluctance to support his attacks on democratic governments with which this country has many common interests.

Danzig Applauds Reichstag Address

Free City of Danzig, Feb. 20 (AP).—Adolf Hitler's Reichstag speech got a warm reception here for his sponsorship of the rights of Germans, even outside the Reich. Danzig has a Nazi government that practically takes orders from Berlin.

Loud speakers on automobiles invaded outlying regions of the Danzig district so villagers could hear Der Fuehrer's words.

'Static' Drowns Out Hitler Over Poland

Warsaw, Poland, Feb. 20 (AP).—Radio reception of Adolf Hitler's Reichstag speech was unsuccessful today in Poland. A strange, motor-like noise drowned the speech on the long-wave and a peculiar whistling sound interefered on short-wave lengths. The noises stopped when the speech was over.

3 Reich Generals Listen, Unmoved, To Hitler's Talk

Kroll Opera House, Berlin, Feb. 20 (U.P.).—Adolf Hitler today delivered the longest speech he has ever made before the Reichstag—just five minutes short of three hours—and effectively disposed of any doubt as to the state of his health.

Der Fuehrer finished his remarkable forensic effort strongly and without the slightest evidence of fatigue, receiving an unprecedented ovation from 2,000 members of the Reichstag and spectators who rose in a massive salute and roared "heils" for several minutes.

There was only one significant exception. Three Reichswehr generals sat in the balcony practically unmoved through the entire performance.

Hitler's Reticence On Fate of Austria Displeases Rome

Rome, Feb. 20 (AP).—Official Fascist circles said today that Reichsfuehrer Hitler's speech was received "very favorably," but unofficial and well-informed quarters expressed some disappointment at the lack of a definite statement on Austrian independence.

Official pleasure was expressed at Hitler's recognition of Premier Mussolini's part in "raising the banner against bolshevism."

On other specific points—such as Hitler's declaration that Germany would protect Germans abroad—authoritative sources would not comment, saying that the official text of the address first must be studied.

Forstmann Warns On Concessions in British Trade Pact

"Any tariff concessions on raw wool or wool products granted to the United Kingdom or her dominions in the forthcoming Reciprocity Trade Treaty will be an economic error of the first magnitude," declared Julius Forstmann, president of the Forstmann Woolen Co., of Passaic, N. J., in a brief to be filed today with the Congressional Committee on Reciprocity Information.

Forstmann acted as adviser to Gen. George W. Goethals, quartermaster general in the World War. For this service and the manner in which it performed its governmental contract, his company received a citation from the U. S. General Staff and the Distinguished Service Certificate.

The manufacturer further asserted that any weakening of the American wool-growing or wool-manufacturing industries through international trade agreements which increase imports of wool products is a serious threat to our national security.

Forstmann declared the wool industry should be built up to supply possible military needs instead of being weakened, as he asserted wool tariff concessions to Great Britain would do.

Talk Lacks Punch, Geneva's Reaction

Geneva, Feb. 20 (AP).—League of Nations quarters expressed belief today that Adolf Hitler's Reichstag speech "lacked the usual punch." His statement that Germany would never return to the League caused no surprise. Der Fuehrer's rejection of international economic plans on the ground that economic opportunity was not enough for Germany, interested the League's experts.

"Naturally economic opportunity does not appeal to the Reich since the whole economic policy of the states has been such that Germany is deprived of any external purchasing power," one expert commented.

Hitler Demands Nazis' Freedom In All Countries

Hitler

Siding with Japan in what he termed her war against "Bolshevism" in China, Hitler said "I do believe even the most sweeping Japanese victory would be infinitely less dangerous for civilization and the general peace of the world than a Bolshevist victory."

As in Italy's war with Ethiopia, he said, "others" had mixed in, preventing a quick peace.

"Germans do not desire war, but they do not fear war."

German industry, he asserted, is equipped for "a re-armament program such as has never been seen before . . . I have also decided to put into effect those expansions of the German defense force that will give us assurance that the wild threats of war against Germany may not some fine day be converted into a use of bloody force."

Since his army and cabinet shake-up early this month, he said, these plans were being executed "rapidly and determinedly."

One by one the speaker eliminated France, Spain and eastern Asia from the scope of his territorial desires, but, turning to Britain, he declared there were no differences with her "——aside from our colonial desires."

Determined to Expand.

"Although Germany has achieved the impossible in managing to get along within her present borders so far, the world cannot expect us to go on forever from year to year."

Then broadly he added "there will be an increasing demand for those colonial possessions which Germany did not take away from other powers and which for these powers today are practically useless—yet for our own people seem indispensable."

Germany wants colonies, not offers of international loans, Hitler said.

"It is our hope that with the return of the Saar the period of Franco-German territorial disputes is definitely ended. Nor has Germany any quarrel whatsoever with England—aside from our colonial desires.

"For any remotely conceivable conflict there is no visible basis. The only thing which poisons and therefore burdens relations between these States is the almost unendurable newspaper agitation which is conducted by those countries (France and England) under the slogan 'freedom of individual opinion.'"

He devoted several minutes to an attack on the foreign press which he said, in part at least, constantly misrepresents Germany.

A "Nationalist" Spain.

Of the civil war in Spain, he said: "Germany and Italy have like views and hence are dealing with the problems in the same manner. Their aim is to make sure there shall be a nationalist Spain completely independent."

The diplomatic gallery was jammed with ambassadors and ministers of virtually all countries accredited here, with the notable exception of France's Ambassador, Andre Francois-Poncet.

Two hours of the three of speechmaking were a grandiose review of his five-year administration.

He piled statistics upon statistics, picturing Germany as a nation in which the citizenry, army and political party worked hand in hand, with production and foreign trade on the increase, health and comfort assured for the people, and strikes and lockouts rendered impossible.

In strong voice and with vigorous gestures, he led up to a glowing tribute to German genius and German blood and soil. There was a burst of frenzied applause from the 741 members of the Reichstag and from the spectators' gallery of the opera house.

The cheering lasted for several minutes. The first big burst of applause came 12 minutes after he started to speak.

Standing before a symbolic German eagle, whose gilded wings were spread wide, he said the increased Nazi influence in Austria, where the majority of the populace is German-speaking, had "removed differences which might have resulted in catastrophe."

Der Fuehrer declared "Germans do not desire war, but they do not fear war."

His army, his navy and his air force, he proclaimed, were well prepared.

"Nobody longer doubts," Hitler shouted, "that I am the authorized leader of this state.

"Every man in authority here carries the emblem of Nazi sovereignty on his head."

French Boys Find Huge Arms Cache

Paris, Feb. 20 (AP).—Police announced two boys exploring a stone quarry at Annet-Sur-Marne, near Meaux, Saturday found two tons of arms and munitions, including three antitank guns and 18 machine guns, hidden in a cave.

Detectives from Paris said the cache was one of the largest found since opening of the official investigation of the "Czar," secret revolutionary organization, which has led to numerous arrests.

Common Sense About Constipation

If you knew that your constipation was caused by something left out of your food, wouldn't it be just common sense to put that something back?

Your trouble may be caused by nothing more than this. For the most common kind of constipation is due to lack of "bulk" in the bowels—you need some food that passes on through the stomach without being digested. Kellogg's All-Bran supplies this. It gives the bowels the bulky mass they need to work properly. And All-Bran also gives them the intestinal-tonic, vitamin B, which helps restore their tone.

Eat All-Bran as a cereal or baked in muffins. But however you eat it, be sure you get some every day. And drink plenty of water. All-Bran is made by Kellogg in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

Translation of Hitler's Parliamentary Policy Statement

No One Now Doubts He Is the Chieftain, Reichstag Told.

Berlin, Feb. 20.—The following is an abstract translated from the official German text of Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's address to the Reichstag today:

Chancellor Hitler opened his speech with a brief reference to the fact that the Reichstag originally had been intended to meet January 30 but the session had been postponed until today because "I deemed it advisable to make a series of personnel changes not before but after January 30.

"Secondly, I thought it necessary to bring about an urgently needed clarification in a certain sphere of our foreign relations."

Thereafter Hitler devoted more than an hour to a recapitulation of Nazi achievements since 1933, stressing the great upswing in all lines of production, including, last but not least, more babies. He painted a picture of crowded shipyards and factories working to capacity with unemployment vanished.

Absolute Unity in Politics.

Turning at last to the reorganization of the government February 4, Hitler said "if it contributes to the peace of mind of foreign wiseacres, let them go ahead and believe that in Germany God knows what differences exist between the armed forces and national socialism.

"We gladly grant them this kind of inner satisfaction. If, however, they should ever attempt to draw other conclusions from this belief, then let them take notice of the following:

"There is, in Germany, no question of a national Socialist state as against a national Socialist party and no question of a national Socialist party as against national Socialist armed forces.

"In this Reich, everyone in any kind of responsible position is a national Socialist. Every man carries the emblem of national Socialist sovereignty on his head. . . .

"The party controls the Reich politically and the armed forces defend this Reich in the military sphere.

"Every institution in this Reich has its appointed tasks and there is no one in any responsible position in this state who doubts I am the authorized leader of this Reich."

Praises Blomberg, Fritsch.

Among the men whom the nation could thank for building up such a fine and loyal army, Hitler said, were Field Marshal Werner von Blomberg, the war minister, and Gen. Werner von Fritsch, the commander in chief, who resigned in connection with the personnel changes February 4, "after many years of loyal work for the new Reich."

Hitler said the reason he took over the direct command of the armed forces at this time was that "problems of the future demanded a stronger concentration of political and military might."

Hitler said it was his hope that through this action "we can achieve in the shortest possible time that strengthening of our military power which is called for by the general situation at the moment."

Germany was peaceful but not cowardly, Hitler emphasized, adding:

"If ever international agitation poisoning public opinion should seek to destroy the peace of our Reich, then steel and iron will protect the German people and their German homeland and the world quickly will see how thoroughly this Reich, this people, party and armed forces are filled with one spirit and how fanatically motivated by one will."

Will Demand Colonies.

After castigating newspapers which carried recent wild rumors of the collapse of the German army, Hitler turned to the subject of colonies.

He expressed the opinion that if Britain were suddenly to dissolve the empire and England had to support itself by her own resources, Englishmen would have far more understanding of Germany's problems.

Hitler said "although Germany has achieved the impossible in managing to get along within her present borders so far, the world cannot expect us to go on forever from year to year.

"Therefore, there will be an increasing demand for those colonial possessions which Germany did not take away from other powers and which for these powers today are practically useless—yet for our own people seem indispensable."

Offers of loans instead of colonies are not wanted, Hitler said. He did not state precisely, however, what Germany expects in the way of colonies nor mention any definite plan or new understanding between European powers.

"You will not expect me to express myself on the subject of individual international plans which momentarily seem to be arousing more or less interest among various governments. They are too uncertain and too unclear to permit me to take a position regarding them.

"I have a deep-seated distrust for conferences."

Hitler also reiterated at some length his dislike for the League of Nations and spurned any suggestion Germany might yet return to the League.

He was particularly scornful of the League's attitude toward colonies and suggested colonial empires existing at present did not arise through a series of democratic plebiscites among the natives "but through naked, brutal force."

Germany does not intend to let itself be dragged into anyone else's quarrels nor does it intend to deny the existence of obvious facts.

Germany, therefore, "will recognize Manchukuo. If I have decided to take this step it is because I want to draw a clear line between the policy of fanatic incomprehensibilities and a policy of sober respect for actual facts.

"Let me repeat again that Germany—especially after the departure of Italy from the League—does not even dream of ever going back into that institution."

He said, however, that rejection of the League did not mean unwillingness to co-operate with other powers.

Soviet Russia, Hitler declared, is the only state with which Nazi Germany has no desire to co-operate for Soviet Russia is trying to bolshevize the world.

Questions England.

If England was really anxious to defend her status quo, Hitler remarked, she would energetically oppose the bolshevization of other countries.

"For such bolshevized regions are then no longer self-governing states with a national life of their own but only sections of the Moscow revolutionary center.

"I know Mr. Eden (British foreign secretary) does not share this view. Stalin does and openly admits it."

Elaborating his theme in connection with the war in China, Hitler said "I'm afraid Japanese defeat in East Asia never would benefit Europe or America but solely Bolshevist Soviet Russia.

"I do not think China spiritually or materially strong enough to resist a bolshevist offense alone. But I do believe even the most sweeping Japanese victory would be infinitely less dangerous for civilization and the general peace of the world than a bolshevist victory."

Charges Meddling.

Hitler said Germany remained anxious for a resumption of peaceful relations between Japan and China and believed there might have been peace before this if others—"just as in the case of Ethiopia"—hadn't mixed in.

In any case "Germany, in defense against communism, will always regard the value of Japan as an element of security. . . .

"Germany has no territorial interests in East Asia. It has an understandable desire to engage in commerce and trade. This does not put us under any obligation to take sides with either party. But it does oblige us to recognize that a Bolshevist victory would annihilate the last possibilities (of trade and commerce) in that region.

"Much has been said and even more written in recent years about the basic differences between France and England on the one hand and Germany on the other," he said. "It is not exactly clear to me just what these differences are supposed to be. Germany, as I more than once have emphasized, has no further territorial demands against France in Europe. It is our hope that with the return of the Saar, the period of Franco-German territorial disputes is definitely ended.

"Nor has Germany any quarrel whatsoever with England—aside from our colonial desires. For any remotely conceivable conflict there is no visible basis. The only thing which poisons, therefore burdens, relations between these states is the almost unendurable newspaper agitation which is conducted in those countries (France and England) under the slogan 'freedom of individual opinion.'"

Referring to the expulsion of Germany from Tsingtao during the World War "by a coalition of white and yellow peoples," Hitler rejected in advance "any invitation to return to Eastern Asia." He said Germany likewise has no territorial interests in Spain.

"As the international press campaign naturally must not be regarded as an element of pacification but as widely endangering the peace of peoples, I have also decided to put into effect those expansions of the German defense force that will give us assurance that the wild threats of war against Germany may not some fine day be converted into a bloody use of force.

"These measures have been under way since February 4 and are being executed rapidly and determinedly."

He reasserted a desire for peace, adding:

"We do not believe, however, in view of this attitude of the press, that much may be expected of conferences and individual talks. The international press campaign against peace will at once know how to sabotage every attempt at rapprochement of peoples. . . .

"We therefore believe that until further notice the way of normal diplomatic exchanges and notes is the only possible one in order to avert the all too clumsy falsifications by this international press."

He insisted this does not mean Germany is not interested in what is happening in the world.

The Minorities Question.

Turning to the problem of German minorities on German borders, Hitler said: "Two states lying at our borders comprise more than 10,000,000 Germans. Until 1866 they had been united with the entire German people in a federation. Against their own will they have been hindered by peace treaties from becoming united with the Reich. Let there be no doubt:

"Separation from the Reich cannot lead to their being without rights as far as their national origin is concerned. That is, the general rights of the self-determination of peoples which were solemnly guaranteed us in Wilson's 14 points as a pre-condition to the Armistice cannot be disregarded suddenly because Germans are involved!"

Hitler warned that unless persecution of national minorities ceased there would some day come an explosion.

"To the interests of the German Reich belong also the protection of those peoples of German origin who are not in a position through their own efforts to secure along the borders for themselves the rights to general, human, political and ideological freedom."

The Fuehrer then spoke with pride of the arrangement with Poland whereby both Germany and Poland respect others' rights even in Danzig. Turning to Austria he said:

"I am happy to be able to tell you that during the recent days a further appeasement was achieved with a country which for many reasons is particularly close to us. It is not only a similar people but above all it has a long and similar history and common culture that tie the Reich and German-Austria together."

The Austrian Agreement.

He said the workings of the July 11, 1936, Austrian-German agreement were not as they should have been and because of this his talk last Saturday with Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg was necessary.

"Through a closer and friendly relationship there now will be possible co-operation in political, personal and economic realms.

"I want at this point to express sincere thanks to the Austrian Chancellor for his deep understanding and warm-hearted readiness wherewith he accepted my invitation, and he endeavored with me to find a way that is quite as much in the interests of the two countries as it is in the interests of the entire German people whose sons we all are no matter where our cradles stood. I believe we thereby made a contribution to European peace."

As evidence of Germany's desire to help in the pacification of Europe, Hitler pointed to German friendship with Hungary, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and "many other states."

"Above all, however, there is cooperation with those two great powers which, like Germany, have seen a wild danger in bolshevism and therefore determined by common defensive action to oppose the Comintern movement.

Happy at Successes.

"That this co-operation with Italy and Japan may ever become deeper and deeper is my sincere wish. As for the rest, we are happy over every appeasement possible in the general political situation."

Hitler said he had no doubts that international co-operation was necessary for the common well-being of all.

"The German people essentially is not warlike, but soldierly; that is, it does not want war, but also does not fear it. It loves peace, but equally loves its honor and its freedom."

Hitler then went into his peroration on the greatness of the German people.

"To serve this people with all my strength was, and is, the greatest happiness of my life. I want at this hour to implore our Lord God to give His blessing in ensuing years to our labors and our deeds and that He preserve us both from false pride and from every childish surrender."

Credit Germany's Alone.

Hitler described how the Nazi revolution, through discipline, was carried out bloodlessly and legally—differently from those in other countries. He referred to the guillotine of the French revolution and firing squads in Soviet Russia.

"To meet such a catastrophic situation," said Der Fuehrer, "it was necessary first to take no half measures and second to act immediately.

"The situation was such that the people cried out not for parliamentary debates or plebescites but for deeds . . .

"If Germany today is economically saved, the German people owes it to its own leadership and its own labor. Other countries have contributed nothing to it."

Hitler went on to describe how the rehabilitation of the Reich was brought about by substituting labor for money instead of by mere manipulation of currency. Afterward, for a solid hour, he went into statistical details of the national economic structure.

"In these five years," he said, "we have created out of an impotent and downtrodden people a proud and self-reliant nation.

"It was and is my will that the German nation shall realize by practical achievements it is not a second class or inferior people and that, in the highest sense of the word, it is co-equal with others and entitled to equal rights.

Must Toil On.

"To these achievements also belongs the setting up of a government which is as remote from a parliamentary democracy as it is from a military dictatorship. . . .

"As for the future, there is for us no other way than still more intensive work and production. The German people have a high standard of living.

"The world ought to be glad of that, because the higher the standard of living the greater becomes the desire for peace.

"If a nation of 140 people to the square kilometer, without great wealth, without gold reserves, without colonies and bled white for 15 years, has accomplished the miracle of conquering unemployment and keeping up, nay improving, its standard of living through its own efforts, then I say that those who, despite great economic advantages, are unable to solve their own employment problems should keep their mouths shut."

Hitler asserted the League of Nations stood for the perpetuation of a state of affairs brought about by 1,000 years of injustice.

"Either might is right or might is wrong," he declared. "If might is wrong today it was wrong before. If, therefore, the present world situation has been brought about by might, it follows that the situation is all wrong.

Laughter and Cheers.

"I can quite understand that those who are interested in the preservation of what they have got by force find in the League a happy forum for their ideas. But what I cannot understand is why one who was robbed of his property by force should be expected to join this illustrious band."

Here the great audience burst into loud laughter and cheers.

"And I," Hitler continued, "must object distinctly to the inference we do not want to defend the right because we are not in the League.

"On the contrary, we are not in the League because we believe it is not an institution for justice, but for the defense of the injustice of Versailles.

"In pointing this out, we believe we are doing a kindness to those deluded nations who still regard the League as a reliable factor for assistance. For we would have thought better, for instance, in the case of the Ethiopian war, first, to show more understanding of Italy's vital necessities and, secondly, to give less encouragement and fewer promises to the Ethiopians.

"We are simply not thinking of any eventuality whereby the German nation might become entangled in a conflict in which it is not interested. We are not willing to step in on behalf of the territorial and economic interest of others without seeing if there is even the smallest advantage in it for Germany. Nor do we expect that sort of support from other peoples.

Wise Limitations.

"Germany is determined wisely to limit herself both as regards her interests and her demands.

"Should, however, German interests be seriously endangered anywhere, we shall not expect to receive any support from the League of Nations, but we shall take for

Highlights of Hitler's Address to Reichstag

Berlin, Feb. 20 (AP).—Here are high lights from the speech of Chancellor Adolf Hitler of Germany to the Reichstag yesterday:

"In this Reich . . . there is no one in any responsible position who doubts I am the authorized leader."

". . . There will be an increasing demand for those colonial possessions which Germany did not take away from other powers and which for these powers today are practically useless—yet for our own people seem indispensable."

Germany "well recognize Manchoukuo. If I have decided to take this step it is because I want to draw a clear line between the policy of fantastic incomprehensibilities and a policy of sober respect for actual facts."

"I know Mr. Eden (Britain's resigning foreign secretary) does not share this view (that Britain should energetically oppose bolshevism as a threat to the status quo). Stalin does and openly admits it."

Wants Colonies Not Originally Acquired by German Force.

Mexico Reported In Japanese Deal To Deepen Harbor

Mexico City, Feb. 20 (AP).—The newspaper Excelsior today quoted unspecified foreign reports that the Mexican government was engaged in negotiations for Japan to deepen and modernize Mexico's West Coast port of Mazatlan.

Additional reports Mexico was dickering with Japan for exploitation of iron ore deposits on the West Coast failed to gain any substantiation from diplomatic or commercial sources.

"We are having to spend a lot of money in China now," a Japanese legation spokesman said, "and have none for investments in foreign countries."

The unconfirmed rumor attracted interest in the light of year-old litigation by which the Mexican government is seeking to revoke the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s concession in Michoacan State, which includes hundreds of acres of rich iron ore.

Nazi Headquarters Wrecked by Bomb

Philadelphia, Feb. 20 (AP).—A three-story building, headquarters of a German singing club and meeting place of some Nazi organizations, was damaged today by explosion of what Detective Sergt. Leo Dinty said was a home-made bomb.

Hitler Speech Read at Home By Roosevelt

President Silent, Refers All Queries on Address to State Department.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Feb. 20 (AP).—President Roosevelt withdrew from the circle of a family reunion long enough today to read official reports sent him by the State Department on Adolf Hitler's speech to the Reichstag, but officials said no comment could be expected here.

Unofficially, however, there was speculation that the warlike tone of the address, especially the threatening phrases used in demanding return of German colonies lost in the World War, could not have had anything but a disturbing effect in view of the President's repeated pronouncements for peaceful settlement of international differences.

Reporters seeking official reaction were referred to the State Department in Washington. Officials would not say whether the Chief Executive heard the broadcast of an English translation of the speech.

U. S. Cool Toward Speech.

By the United Press.

The long-awaited speech by Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler found a cool reception among Administration officials who last night pondered its probable effect on the balance of power in the Sino-Japanese crisis.

No responsible official would comment for publication but privately they noted that Hitler's apparent recognition of Manchukuo, carved out of China by Japanese bayonets, came at a time when Japan badly needs a stimulus to her invasion of China.

Meanwhile State Department and Administration spokesmen indicated there would be no comment, private or official, on the resignation of British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden.

Hitler and Il Duce to Partition Europe, Dodd Asserts in Secret

Reich to Get Netherlands, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Balkans; Italy Eyes Spain and Africa, House Group Told.

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

William E. Dodd, former United States Ambassador to Germany, in secret testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee revealed an alleged plan by which he said Germany and Italy may attempt to gain complete control of Danubian Europe and the Mediterranean, it was learned last night.

Details of the testimony were disclosed by a member of the committee who declined use of his name. Efforts to contact Dodd were unavailing.

The committee member said the former diplomat told his group, in an executive session attended by all 25 members, that the two Fascist powers plan to carve out a new "Holy Roman Empire" on the continent and in North Africa. He quoted Dodd as saying he had seen maps in Berlin, outlining in brown the domain Germany wants.

This territory purportedly includes the Netherlands, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia and the Polish corridor in addition to whatever could be obtained through "nazification" of Austria and the Balkan states.

He was quoted as saying that German school children are being taught that it is Germany's destiny to control these nations by right of blood, tradition and heritage and that, meanwhile, Premier Benito Mussolini, at the other end of the Berlin-Rome axes, has his eye on Spain, Egypt and Palestine.

Dodd assertedly explained that Il Duce is particularly anxious to gain control of southern Spain and extend his domain across the Straits of Gibraltar into Spanish Morocco as a check against British domination of the Mediterranean, through which all Italian sea-borne commerce must pass, the United Press informant said.

He assertedly told the committee that Germany and Italy probably would not resort to arms except as a last means of gaining their objectives. He said Japan is a most important consideration in activities of the Rome-Berlin axis and predicted that the island empire would come to the aid of the two European Fascist powers immediately in event of a major war.

He said a boycott of the "have not" powers by the "haves" would crush Germany, Italy and Japan, but added that the horrors of the last war are still so fresh in the memories of the British, French and American governments that they are afraid to act.

It was learned Dodd charged that after the inter-American peace conference at Buenos Aires late in 1936, Germany sent secret agents to the Argentine capital to undermine the good will engendered by President Roosevelt's and Secretary of State Hull's visits.

Youth to Be Arraigned In Slaying Over Bird

Henderson, N. C., Feb. 20 (AP).—Clarence Fairbanks, 23, of Washington, D. C., will be arraigned here tomorrow on a charge of killing his employer, Steve Good, owner of a miniature circus, the night of January 16.

The youth, Sheriff J. E. Hamlett said, confessed soon after his arrest that he hacked Good to death in a fight that developed after Fairbanks reprimanded the showman for abusing a pet white South American cockatoo, one of the show exhibits.

Rebels Besiege Teruel Fiercely From All Sides

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France, at the Spanish Frontier, Feb. 20.—The fate of Teruel tonight hung on a fierce battle raging on the city's outskirts, where Loyalist soldiery was fighting desperately against advancing insurgent troops attempting to recapture the city lost more than two months ago.

Insurgent military dispatches said Teruel, 120 miles east of Madrid, was now "undefendable" by a government garrison locked in a tight siege.

Government sources, however, said their generals had drawn the insurgents into a trap permitting them to encircle the city along a thin line and then smash at Generalissimo Francisco Franco's troops from both within and without the shattered city.

Artillery Silent.

Barcelona dispatches admitted wide insurgent gains north of Teruel in the last few days but said the city still was in complete government control.

Both sides withheld artillery fire, fearing shells would land among their own forces so close were the battle lines. Machine gun and rifle fire was continuous.

The gold and red insurgent banner was said in insurgent reports to be planted on rooftops of Teruel's north and northeast suburbs as the insurgents advanced slowly toward the center of the city which has been the crux of nearly all military action of the past five months of civil war.

Government defenses along the mountain valley gateway into the devastated city from the northeast crumbled last night under fierce aerial, artillery and infantry attacks.

Translation of Hitler's Statement on Policies

granted we must ourselves solve the tasks arising therefrom.

"That is all to the good, to be perfectly clear about this, for this knowledge will impose upon our wishes and hopes that moderation which we must but too often find lacking in those who are collectively protected.

"We have no intention in the future of having any international institution prescribe to us an attitude which in excluding an official recognition of undeniable facts, has little similarity to the actions of reasoning men but, rather to the habits of a well known large bird. (The audience knew he meant an ostrich.)

"Germany once had to take part in such a senseless action, thanks to membership in the League of Nations. I now have determined to make a historically necessary correction in this case."

So saying, Hitler announced the recognition of Manchukuo.

He added: "I wish to declare once more that Germany—and all the more so after Italy's withdrawal from the League of Nations—does not consider ever returning to that institution."

After discussing Japan's action in China and stating his belief that Japan was blocking infiltration into China of Communism, Hitler asserted: "We entertain no doubts but that even the greatest Japanese victory will not in the least touch the cultures of the white races, just as we have no doubt but that the victory of Bolshevism would mean the end of the 1,000-year-old culture of the white race."

The Spanish Situation.

Hitler said the situation in Spain was similar "to what we experienced ourselves here in Germany" and continued:

"And, exactly as in Germnay, so also in this case, the democratic international is to be found on the side of the Bolshevist incendiaries.

"In the bolshevization of Spain, the German government would see not only an element for disquieting Europe, but a disturbance to the European balance of power. For, once this land (Spain) had become a subsection of the Moscow central office, the danger would exist of further spreading this plague of destruction and of annihilation with consequences which we could then under no circumstances face with equanimity.

"We are happy, therefore, that our anti-Bolshevist attitude is shared with a third state. German and Italian relationship is based upon a community of attitudes, both regarding the life of the state as well as a common defense against the dangers that threaten us internationally.

"If Mussolini had not conquered Italy by the 1922 victory of his Fascist movement, that country presumably would have fallen prey to bolshevism. The consequences of such a collapse to western civilization simply could not be imagined."

Here Hitler asserted that, as a result, Germany and Italy were acting in Spain in the same manner.

Four Men Jailed For Safety After Attack on Mother

Atchison, Kans., Feb. 20 (U.P.).—Four colored prisoners—including a father and his two sons—were rushed to State prison at Lansing, Kans., for safekeeping tonight, after they allegedly admitted attacking a white woman, mother of three children.

Authorities, who took three of the men to St. Joseph, Mo., for questioning after lynch talk was heard in Troy, Kans., the woman's home town, stopped long enough in Atchison to pick up a fourth suspect implicated by the first three.

Sheriff W. C. Worman, of Troy, 40 miles south of Atchison, said the woman was Mrs. Evelyn Fisher, 27. Chief of Detectives John Duncan, at St. Joseph, said the three admitted raping the woman early today after picking her up as she walked home from a dance.

Nolan Case Jury Still Deadlocked

Sunday brought little rest to the deadlocked Nolan jurors. The nine men and three women returned to the District Courthouse from the Continental Hotel at 9:45 a. m. yesterday to continue the deliberations begun Friday. They recessed for dinner at noon, returned to the jury room afterward and were permitted to adjourn for the night about 5 p. m.

Pacifist Charge Of 'War Scare' Denied by Navy

'Lean-Over-Backward' Policy Ordered on Huge Defense Program.

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

The Navy Department last night moved to halt charges it is propagandizing President Roosevelt's $800,000,000 naval expansion bill by invoking a policy of "let Congress do the talking."

Angered by accusations from pacifist groups in and out of Congress that the Navy Department is creating "war scares" to ballyhoo the program, Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson, Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, and others of the high command have ordered a "lean over backward" to de-emphasize departmental utterances.

The policy embraces a "gentlemen's understanding" that there will be no radio speeches which can be construed as propaganda, a general squelching of "loose talk," and rigid observance of Navy regulations governing public relations.

Navy officials contend they always have sought to steer away from propaganda as a general policy.

The "tighten-up" order came in the midst of tremendous public interest in the program, hearings on which continue today before the House Naval Affairs Committee with Rear Admiral W. G. Dubose, chief of naval construction, testifying.

Kern Dodge, president of the Air Defense League of Philadelphia, made public yesterday a letter he had sent on behalf of the league to Representative Carl Vinson (Democrat), Georgia, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, regarding the Navy enlargement program. Kern wrote:

"This proposed naval expansion bill is completely unsound, and if enacted will saddle our citizens with huge tax bills for many years for an obsolete and inadequate war machine. It should be defeated at all costs."

Barkley Is Facing Race in Kentucky, D.C. Letter Reveals

By the Associated Press.

Any doubt that Senator Barkley, the majority leader, faces a re-election battle with Gov. A. B. Chandler of Kentucky appeared ended last night when Joseph Leib, a Washington resident, made public a letter he received from the Governor.

Leib said the Governor wrote in response to an inquiry as to his attitude toward a third term for President Roosevelt:

"Inasmuch as I am about to announce my candidacy for the United States Senate, the position the President takes in that race may have some bearing on my attitude toward a third term for him.

"So far as I know, President Roosevelt has no intention of running for re-election to a third term, and it is entirely too soon now to begin to figure on who will be nominated for President in 1940."

Power Board Requests Data on Rate Changes

By the Associated Press.

The Power Commission ordered all utilities companies yesterday to report by March 31 the effect on annual revenues of rate changes made between July 1, 1935 and the end of 1937.

Acting Chairman Clyde L. Seavey, announcing the order, said:

"As these rate changes, in the large majority of instances, have been reductions, these reports will show particularly the estimated effect of lower rates on the revenues of both privately and publicly owned electric utilities."

house have lived in an atmosphere of tense expectation for the past two years and a number recently have expressed themselves as fearing a coalition between the Democratic organization members of the board of county commissioners and King which would clean the courthouse of Fusion employees and return organization followers to the county jobs.

Loyalty Stressed.

Republican leaders last night indicated they are pleased with the turn of events. One said that the Fusion Party now will begin to function as it was intended for the first time and that disloyal Fusion employes will find the going rough from now on while loyal Fusionists will feel secure in their jobs.

"We have a Democrat who will work in harmony with the Republicans now," one leader said. "Plummer is opposed to increasing the indebtedness of the county and to issuance of any more bonds. He is a bitter enemy of the Democratic oranization and believes the Fusion Party has accomplished a great deal and will do even better under the new set-up."

Plummer has lived in Gaithersburg since he was a boy. He is a farmer and dealer in horses and cattle as well as a professional bondsman. Recently he became a large dairyman.

Served as Sheriff.

He served as sheriff of the county for four years and has been a leader of the Fusion Party. He was candidate for the Democratic nomination for Representative from the Sixth Congressional District but was defeated by Representative David J. Lewis, the incumbent.

Approximately 50 civic leaders from the Silver Spring area yesterday formed a caravan which drove to King's home in Washington Grove to demand that he reconsider and defeat the rezoning.

King met the group at his front door and invited them inside.

"I feel that I have made a mistake," King declared. "I didn't study this situation as thoroughly as I should have and I intend to rectify my mistake by moving for a reconsideration and voting against this rezoning." He made no mention of his resignation, which was dated last Friday.

The civic leaders cheered his statement and departed well satisfied.

Political observers declare it is almost certain that Plummer will vote against the rezoning of the site overlooking the park if it can be brought to a vote at the next meeting. The question seems to be whether or not Plummer as successor for King also has his prerequisite of recalling a motion on which he had voted affirmatively before minutes of the meeting have been read.

Congressional Driver Refuses To Give Name After Collision

Holder of 'Special Privilege' License Leaves His Tag Bent Around Bumper of Navy Officer's Car; Park Police to Act.

A driver holding a "special privilege" Congressional license tag yesterday was involved in a collision with the car of Commander Carl W. Styer, U. S. N., and drove away after refusing to identify himself, Commander Styer told a Post reporter last night.

The driver of the car, bearing Massachusetts plates, left his Congressional tag bent over the bumper of Commander Styer's car.

Commander Styer said that the "special privilege" car crased into his at intersection of Arlington Ridge road and the road leading to Lincoln Memorial Bridge. Commander Styer said the other car turned right into the Ridge road, on which the commander's car was moving east.

Commander Styer said that following the collision he walked over to the driver of the other car and asked to see his driver's license.

"I won't talk to you," was the man's reply, Commander Styer said. With that he drove off.

No one was injured in the crash, but both cars received minor damage.

Styer took the license plate and reported the accident to Park Police. They indicated there would be a thorough investigation.

William A. VanDuzer, commissioner of motor vehicles in the District, said last night that the record of Congressional license holders was on file in his office.

He said that between 350 and 600 of the plates had been issued.

Van Duzer said that since the Congressional tags were not registration tags, neither District Metropolitan Police nor Park Police had a record of Congressional tag holders. In event of an accident involving a car bearing Congressional tags, Van Duzer said Metropolitan Police would go through the regular procedure of wiring to the State where the registration tags were issued to obtain the name of the holder.

Suffrage And Reorganization.

Support from the Federation of Citizens Associations still further strengthens the demand for reorganization of Washington's makeshift government. Virtually the entire community is now lined up behind the movement to give the Capital City more effective municipal service.

It is questionable, however, whether the federation's appeal for local suffrage will enhance its influence with respect to the more immediate problem of obtaining a "modern, effective and economical government." The federation has not indorsed any specific plan to give Washingtonians the voting privilege. Any formula that may be developed by its suffrage committee will have to be approved by the federation. In view of that fact, the entire issue might well have been separated from the more urgent problem of modernizing the existing government.

Virtually all plans of enfranchising local residents are concentrated upon the election of District representatives in Congress. That is the basis of the setup proposed by the Prettyman committee. It would first modernize the existing government for administrative purposes, and then create an ordinance-making council for the District when and if the Capital City is granted representation in Congress. That council would consist of the Commissioners and two Congressional representatives of the District. Until the District is granted national legislators, the ordinance-making powers would be exercised by the Commissioners alone.

Whether or not the community as a whole is ready to accept this specific plan, a constitutional amendment would be necessary before that part dealing with suffrage could become effective. Such amendments have been before Congress for a long time without winning its approval. It would obviously be unwise to make modernization of the municipal government contingent upon the adoption of this proposed constitutional change.

If Washington's governmental problem is considered realistically, then, it will be divided into two issues—reorganization and suffrage. The first can be immediately achieved; the second is more remote and controversial. Regardless of what the ultimate objective may be, good strategy calls for concentration of efforts on the more immediate undertaking. That is especially true because of the fact that reorganization of present administrative machinery is a necessary preliminary to any reasonable plan for self-government here.

The so-called Territorial government established in Washington shortly after the Civil War failed in large measure because of its hodgepodge division of powers. The greatest advantage that could be given any possible future elected government would be an efficient municipal system already in operation. It should not be difficult, therefore, to enlist both the advocates and opponents of suffrage in a united effort to insure the drafting and enactment of satisfactory District reorganization bills.

Economy At Dupont Circle.

A curious argument is being raised against the proposed underpass beneath Dupont Circle. After discussing that project with local residents who are opposing it, Chairman Thomas, of the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations, informed newspapermen that he is "under a sort of commitment to keep the budget down." The Senator's implied attitude should be carefully examined.

Ordinarily the need for economy makes a powerful argument against proposed public improvements. In this case, however, it is merely a question of whether Congress should permit the District to spend funds already on hand for relief of costly traffic congestion or let that money lie idle in the Treasury without drawing one cent of interest.

Funds for underpasses beneath Dupont and Thomas circles would come from the gasoline and automobile weight taxes. Such revenue cannot be used for general expenses. Even the cost of street lighting charged against this fund by the Budget Bureau is apparently to be eliminated, leaving a prospective surplus of about $788,000 unless other items are included in the appropriations bill.

At a time when traffic congestion is becoming more acute and unemployment in the District is widespread, there certainly could be no point in postponing an urgent improvement of this sort to increase still further a surplus fund that earns no interest. It is generally conceded that this underpass will have to be built in the near future. Since its construction will provide a good many jobs, a reasonable argument might be made for such use of these surplus funds, even if the need were less urgent. When urgency is combined with an ample supply of money for this particular purpose, economy demands that the project should be authorized.

The Shadow Lengthens.

The three-hour speech which Hitler delivered to the Reichstag Sunday is a document of extraordinary importance in the present critical juncture of world affairs. At a time when most nations and statesmen are groping blindly in a fog of doubt and indecision, Hitler stands revealed as a man completely self-confident of his own and his nation's destiny. Fully aware of the growing power which he commands, the speech also indicates that, with the certainty of the mystic, he is convinced this power can successfully be applied for the achievement of certain important ends.

To be sure, the picture drawn by the Fuehrer of Germany's present policies and purposes lacks precision and detail. But the broad outline is unmistakable. It reveals the Third Reich as unsatisfied with having broken the chains of Versailles that so long bound her. She will not permit herself to be confined within present limits. On the contrary, she will, held back only by self-restraint, seek to extend her authority beyond existing borders.

And this will be done regardless of inhibiting treaties and commitments and, if need be, in defiance of the sovereign rights of those nations that happen to lie athwart the path of the Nazi steam roller. None of Hitler's listeners could have failed to notice, in this regard, that in contrast with so many of his past utterances the theme of Sunday's discourse was not the unshackling of the Reich but the Reich's determination to secure a "place in the sun."

Henceforth, if the Fuehrer's words are any indication, Germany will regard herself as the arbiter of Europe, the self-appointed guardian of a new status quo whose outstanding characteristic will be its anti-bolshevism. That is a phrase obviously subject to any interpretation Hitler may care to place upon it. To that system and philosophy of government the Third Reich will continue to be the sworn enemy. Every successful attempt to bolshevize a nation, says Hitler, will be in violation of that status quo.

In other words, Germany has now arrogated to herself the right to interfere in any situation anywhere in the world where the threat of communism, as defined by the Nazi regime, raises its head. In Spain this principle of intervention is already being applied. Czechoslovakia may be the next but probably not the last object of Nazi solicitude in this particular. Nor is it now fantastic to presume that even Latin America is outside the purview of the Hitler doctrine. Asia certainly is not.

In Asia Germany's partner, Japan, is singled out for praise by the Fuehrer for serving as a barrier against bolshevism by waging war on China. As it happens, Hitler does not appear to be entirely sure that Japan can successfully extricate herself from the morass into which her militarists have plunged her. It is extraordinary to note that the Fuehrer's speech embodies the first suggestion by any responsible statesman that there is a real possibility of Japan's defeat. Such a defeat, the Fuehrer warns, would be harmful to Europe and to America and would only benefit Soviet Russia. To forestall such a possibility, therefore, Hitler has thrown the weight of his moral support behind the Tokyo government.

In the meantime, Germany's major interests remain nearer home. The first forward step in the direction of extending the Third Reich's hegemony in central Europe is the absorption of Austria, a development which brings measurably closer the fulfillment of the age-old dream of Mitteleuropa. With respect to the Austrian problem Hitler spoke in dulcet and peaceful words as well he might. For no point would be served in alarming and thus, perhaps, quickening into action those powers which now appear willing to recognize the "cold Anschluss" of Germany and Austria as an accomplished fact.

But the point will not be lost on those powers that Hitler does not regard the potential addition of Austria's acres to the territory of Germany as in any respect a solution of the Third Reich's land problem. On the contrary, the Fuehrer once again raised a strong demand for colonies.

Discussing the army-state problem in Germany, Hitler declared that the recent changes have made it possible for Germany to "achieve in the shortest possible time that strengthening of our military power which is called for by the general situation at the moment." But nobody is threatening Germany. Why then does that country need additional strength? The answer is clear: The growing military power of the Third Reich is the weapon to be employed to bring about the extension of German influence and German hegemony.

It is a disturbing prospect and in no degree made less so by the complete absence of any opposition to it. With Russia rent by internal schisms, with France weak, with Italy acquiescent, with Great Britain undecided as the present serious cabinet crisis indicates, and with America isolated, there is none to block Hitler's ambitions.

No wonder the Fuehrer glories in the breakdown of the League. For with all its faults and all its inadequacies the League did once represent a barrier to the ambitions of aggressive states which, however strong, could not be as strong as the combined strength of the rest of the world. Hitler's objection to the League was and remains that it sought to perpetuate a status quo that hemmed Germany in. The status quo he favors is one in which the other, and particularly the smaller, European powers will be at the mercy of the Reich.

Powerful in her own right, the Third Reich's real strength, like that of her partners—Italy and Japan—lies in the weakness and disunity of nations richer and intrinsically more powerful than she is. That is the source and center of the present European tragedy.

Successful Drifting.

Chapter Five in the story of man's attempts to slide safely off the top of the world has been finished. The Russian scientists who eight months ago encamped near the North Pole are safely aboard ice-breakers after having floated some 1,500 miles. Their obstinacy in refusing earlier rescue by plane now appears justified, for they are returning with all equipment and records.

The earliest adventure of the sort involved a German named Hegemann whose ship was crushed north of Greenland in 1869. With his crew of 14, he drifted for 193 days before escaping across the ice to land. The second drifting party lasted one day longer. Capt. George E. Tyson had taken command of an expedition after the death of Charles Francis Hall, who had carried the American flag farther north than any man had ventured up to 1871.

The expedition's ship, Polaris, had been lost and Tyson found himself with 18 persons, including two Eskimo women and their children, 1,300 miles from the Labrador sealers which ultimately saved them. After 186 days of drifting, the ice split apart just as a hurricane blew up. The women and children were put in a whaleboat and the men floundered for hours in a maelstrom of ice and water to keep it from being swept off their small remaining floe. All survived, by some miracle, to be rescued eight days later.

A harder fate overtook the men aboard the Jeannette, financed by James Gordon Bennett in 1879. Their painful and finally futile struggles to reach safety after their ship had foundered 500 miles from the coast of Siberia are recounted in a current best seller. Discovery of wreckage from their ship led Nansen, the Norwegian explorer, to the fourth essay at polar drifting. He deduced that currents swept eastward across the Polar Sea and southward around Greenland. To prove it, he sailed into the ice off Siberia and, in a year and a half, moved as he had predicted. He lost contact with his ship, however, on a subsequent unsuccessful dash to the Pole, and with one companion floated on the ice for more than a year before being picked up off Spitzbergen.

Presumably the Russians, with the many advantages of modern scientific apparatus, have more specific knowledge not only of ocean but of air currents. These last, indeed, were the main interest of the expedition. Whether the polar skies are the mixing bowl for the world's weather was one object of their observations. Another was to determine the prospects for transpolar aviation. If their findings in the latter respect prove optimistic, man may have done his last dangerous ice drifting.

An Insidious Assault.

In the appropriation bills for the Treasury and Postoffice Departments, the executive offices and independent bureaus there has been inserted a seemingly innocuous proviso that no funds thus provided shall be used to pay Government employes in continental United States unless they are citizens. Should a similar citizenship requirement be inserted in all other appropriations bills, it is estimated that between 2,000 and 3,000 Filipinos would find themselves without jobs. In any case, large numbers face loss of their positions if these pending measures are passed in their present form.

Although Filipinos may not become citizens of the United States, except in certain limited instances, they have the status of nationals owing allegiance to this country. During the past 35 years, therefore, they have been eligible for positions in the Government service, and have been freely permitted to take qualifying examinations. Now, without warning, over the protests of members of the Civil Service Commission and the Secretary of War, it is proposed to cast out these employes, many of whom have served the Government long and faithfully.

When the separation of the Philippine Islands from the United States becomes complete Filipinos will lose their status as nationals. Thereafter they will not be entitled to compete for civil service positions on a basis of equality with American citizens. Even then, however, those already in the service will have a right to expect protection of the jobs which they rightfully hold.

Under present conditions, there is no possible excuse for suddenly withdrawing privileges long enjoyed and applying new standards of eligibility to civil service employes who have met the tests set at the time of appointment. The cruelty and bad faith displayed by such attempts to dislodge a special group, for motives best ignored, admits of no defense.

An amendment to the offending appropriation bills, exempting from the citizenship requirements nationals owing allegiance to the United States would be more than a mere act of decency. It would also be an indication that Congress has some regard for the basic principles of the merit system.

A Chevy Chase Parent.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am seriously distressed by the news item in The Post of February 18, which described the wanton destruction of furnishings in a Chevy Chase residence by a group of children.

As a parent and a resident of Chevy Chase, I am deeply concerned with the question of why there is such widespread lack of respect for the property of other people. We see it in many instances in this community, where the educational, economic and social status of the people appears greater than perhaps in other localities.

A child is not born with the capacity for discriminating between things that can and those that cannot be broken or torn. This distinction is decidedly the outcome of gradual learning, the process of trial and error, and careful training.

The importance of supplying appropriate constructive outlets for the child's activity is one of the few definite rules which the present generation of parents will accept without reservation. We no longer expect the child to be "good" in the sense of being inactive.

The use and care of possessions are important parts of the social discipline in managing the activities of children. They need to satisfy their natural curiosity and training in responsibility for their possessions.

Are we, the parents of Chevy Chase, not aware of the importance of this phase of child training, or do we not realize that such wanton destruction is a long step toward adult lawlessness?

District Suffrage Conference.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your letter columns of February 14 there appeared a communication from Willy Arnheim, strongly advocating suffrage for the District of Columbia and setting for a suggestion for a bill to be enacted by Congress.

In response to this letter to numerous inquiries that have been received from interested individuals and organizations, we wish to advise your readers that the District of Columbia Suffrage Association has issued a call for a conference on suffrage to be held at the District Building on March 18, 1938.

Civic, labor, business, professional and other organizations have been invited to elect delegates to represent their respective organizations at this conference. Every effort is being made to make this conference truly representative of District citizens as a whole, and all organizations that have not already received invitations are urged to apply at our office, room 210, Annapolis Hotel.

At the conference, a program of action will be drawn up based on the suggestions and recommendations of the delegates.

Sitting On Their Hands?

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: Is there any law in Washington prohibiting applause in your theaters? It seems so to me.

I've been in Washington for almost three years and during this time have attended either theater offering vaudeville weekly. I've noticed that most of the time the audience sits through some very fine acts and does not even attempt to applaud. Not only this, but many people around me seem rather annoyed when I gladly applaud the artists' endeavors to please.

Personally, I think that the Washington theater-goers are rude, seemingly unappreciative and unresponsive.

If we went on working for years without a word of encouragement or praise from our boss how would we feel? We'd wonder whether or not we were really pleasing him, wondering if he thought we were doing a good job. So it is with those people of the stage. Your applause is their only way of knowing how their job is coming along, and when their boss hears the applause he figures they are pretty good.

Oldsters' Complaint.

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: President Roosevelt's recent magnanimous declaration that he would not "let the people down" is not calculated to inspire the millions of American stockholders, whose securities are not only "down" but, in many instances, definitely "out" as far as dividends are concerned. Unfortunately, armies of elderly men and women are dependent upon dividends for their daily bread. They rightfully resent the way confidence in business enterprise has been shattered by our political leaders.

One thing is clear: The Administration had demonstrated conclusively that a nation cannot spend and waste its way out of trouble. Hasn't the time arrived for our politicians to admit this fact, demolish a structure that has proven fundamentally unsound, and build anew on firm, well tested American principles?

Veteran To Pacifist.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Quoting from The Post of February 15: "A 20-year-old theological student, Frank Littell, social action chairman of the National Council of Methodist Youth, told the committee he would not fight, even in defensive war, even to protect his mother and sisters from foreign invaders."

What is this country coming to? A fine specimen of young manhood. No doubt his mother and sisters are proud of him.

I shudder to think what would become of this country if a majority of the young people harbored the same asinine ideas. We would be another China multiplied a hundredfold! A VETERAN.
Washington, Feb. 15.

States' Rights.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: They talk about States' rights. What rights? The States have no rights. By that I mean the majority in each State has no right to commit outrages on the minority. No State has any right ethically, or even legally to leave its citizens unprotected. If a dominant majority in any State wantonly disregards the real obligation of the State to do as Virginia has done and put a stop to lynchings, the State forfeits the right to deal with the situation. It is not coming into the controversy with clean hands. There are no rights without obligations.

If the States will not perform their obligations, then the United States Government has its obligations, too, and members of the Senate who make the United States neglect its duty are themselves accessory to the crime of lynching.

What 'Every Patriotic American' Hopes

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I commend the attack by your correspondent, Miss Fisch, in the February 17 issue of your paper, upon the fallacious idea that England is or should be our natural ally? From the standpoint of self-interest and of international stability, our co-operation must be with the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo axis, and I look forward to a time when public opinion will demand our adherence to that axis.

Except for the unfortunate accident of language, we have nothing whatever in common with England, Canada or any part of the British Empire. Our heritage is largely Teutonic-Aryan. We were dragged into the last war by British, French and Belgian propaganda, in opposition, I believe, to the sympathies of a majority of our citizens.

The coming war must find us on the right side. To be elsewhere would be disastrous. It would mean the ultimate partition of the country, with Japan holding Alaska and the West as far as the Rocky Mountains and with Germany and Italy dividing the rest of the country under some sort of mandate or mutual protectorate.

As a patriotic American, I am unwilling to see our national identity submerged, even though it might mean a swifter purification of our racial culture and the more rapid modernization of our government. The same ends can be accomplished without allowing ourselves to become a conquered nation, with the inevitable stigma that goes with such a "loss of face." And conquered we would be—make no mistake about it—if we enter another war on the side of the decadent democracies. The next war will be won by Germany, Italy and Japan and their allies. The destiny of the world depends upon—and demands—such a victory!

Our own political economy for the past five years has been pointed toward the totalitarian ideal of government. Politically, we are no longer a republic, but a democracy with a controlled majority. It is but a step from a controlled majority to a completely controlled political economy and the sooner we take that step the better. The recent triumphant passage of the Government's farm bill indicates the direction we are taking and must take to modernize our economic and our Government structure. It brings great encouragement to those of us who recognize the absolute necessity of a completely controlled agriculture and industry in the modern state.

Further, the outworn ideas of the "right of the individual" and of so-called "personal liberty" must be stamped ruthlessly out of our educational system and that system reoriented to train the individual and the group for the service of the state. Immediate progress toward this ideal could be made by a consolidation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the German-American Bund and the National Youth Administration into a youth movement patterned on the lines of similar movements in Germany and Italy. The direct Nazi control of the Bund would, necessarily, be transferred to the head of such a movement.

It is tremendously encouraging to find so many Americans everywhere—in Congress, in the contributors' columns of the newspapers, on public platforms and on street corners, inveighing against any actual or sympathetic alliance with Great Britain.

Every patriotic American who hopes for the time when America will take her place with Germany and Italy as a modern state, thanks God for such legislators as Johnson and Borah, who stand implacably against a vicious and dangerous friendship with England. All legislators who, by speeches and votes, set their faces courageously and militantly against "undertakings" and "alliances" and "sympathies" with England raise hopes here and in Germany, in Italy and in Japan that the time is not far distant when America will become one of the poles of an invincible Berlin-Rome-Tokyo-Washington axis.

If that is too much for which to hope at this time, then at least we can rely on the isolationists and the temporarily useful pacifists in Congress and in the country to prevent any understanding with Britain that might weaken and delay the ultimate triumph and vindication of the German world state and its allies. Scaup No Scoop.

DOGGONE science anyway! Science says the ground hog is a bum and it pooh-poohs the idea that if it rains on St. Swithin's Day one must look out for a deluge.

And now science has gone and pricked the lovely bubble of an early spring we had blown upon learning just the other day that wild duck and geese were returning north far in advance of previous years. Who should know better than the migratory birds whether spring is far behind? Right! But science says you're foolish to take a change from red flannels on the premature honk of a snow goose, or even a lesser scaup.

* * *

Our current mad had its origin this week when we asked Edward Kelly what he knew. Mr. Kelly is in the office of National Capital Parks and very often he is good for a story. Mr. Kelly said he didn't know anything.

"Come now Ed," we prodded, "this is a quiet day. Haven't you even got something on the ducks?".

The ducks in question are those at the wildfowl sanctuary at Roaches Run, on the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway just below Washington Airport. Some are year 'round residents, but the majority are overnight guests who appreciate an inn such as this when they are migrating. The parks office administers the refuge.

"Well," replied Ed, "Paul Hodge (the caretaker), told me he spotted a flock of lesser scaup at the Run today, which surprised him very much because they don't usually head north until the middle of March. In fact, he said this is the earliest he has ever seen that species of duck in these parts."

That sounded great to these ears. Certainly it meant an early spring. Farewell soon to heat bills . . . Alan before long can begin wearing the cowboy suit we bought him for Christmas . . . how glad we'll be to shed the overcoat. Oh yes, and it was a story, too.

* * *

Blow No. 1 was delivered by the boss weatherman, Dr. Willis R. Gregg. We should never have telephoned him in the first place. The triumph that was in our voice when we proudly announced to him that lesser scaup were here, and did he want to make something of it turned to ashes when he came back with:

"Early migrations northward don't necessarily mean that the cold weather is over. Wild ducks sometimes get fooled that way, not to mention gullible human beings like yourself."

Dr. Gregg didn't say "gullible human beings like yourself" but we know darn well that is what he was thinking. With a weak "thank you," which we certainly did not mean at all, we hung up and dialed Dr. Alexander Wetmore, who is assistant secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, head of the National Museum and—more pertinent to our purposes—a crackerjack ornithologist.

Surely he wouldn't give the birds the bird as dependable weather forecasters.

"Wildfowl," he began, "shift about according to local weather conditions." That sounded ominous but we allowed him to continue. "Not infrequently they come north too soon, are surprised by sudden cold and have to fly south again."

Et tu, Dr. Wetmore!

"There is nothing to the myth that an early migratory flight means the seasons have changed."

He was rubbing it in, something which even the notoriously skeptical weatherman spared us.

* * *

In desperation we turned to the Bureau of Biological Survey. Yes, to its migratory fowl division. Why hadn't we thought of that in the first place? They would tell us what we wanted to hear.

Sure you will, won't you Mr. A. C. Elmer, assistant chief of the division?

"You want to know whether the arrival of lesser scaup in this vicinity is the herald of spring?" Mr. Elmer repeats our question. "Had you heard only about the scaup? Didn't you know that 8,000 great snow geese have been sighted on the island below Norfolk which offers them protection each year when they are bound north? It's the earliest they've come through in a long time, perhaps ever."

Ah, now we're getting somewhere. Bless you, Mr. Elmer, and do continue.

"Did someone tell you that means winter is over?"—horrors, what is this?—"The truth is that those geese and the scaup, too, left their southern haunts early to attend the wildlife conference that is going on in Baltimore this week."

Custodian Of The Chair

The electrician who designed and installed the electric chair in the Texas death chamber disqualified himself as juror in a murder case on the ground that he was opposed to capital punishment. There is no inconsistency between his professional action and his moral compunctions. He might have been in favor of capital punishment, when he installed the apparatus for it or he might never have given the subject a thought before that or even up to the time he entered the jury box. Indeed, he could still approve it as a general principle, and yet feel disqualified to decide the issue by his natural repugnance to condemning a person to the death he had prepared. And that electrician isn't any more squeamish than the average person would be.

Kansas City Candor.

Kansas City.

ARRIVING IN Kansas City on a rather indefinite mission to look and listen, your correspondent was greeted by Mr. Otto Higgins, who is famous as a journalist in these parts and not unknown in some quarters of the Old World, where he spent some time writing one word after another about the great war.

PEGLER.

Mr. Higgins is now the director of police, and, therefore, when he offered to reveal the night life of the gateway to the West, your correspondent was inclined to hedge, not wishing to put him on a spot.

"What sort of night life?"

"Oh, crap games, keeno, anything that strikes your interest," he said.

This candor was a little puzzling, because in most cities the head man of the police force would be astonished and furious to learn that such sports were proceeding in spite of his constant watchfulness. Mr. Higgins explained, however, that Kansas City was different, and presently there appeared on the scene Mr. Red Mathieson, a detective lieutenant of the raiding and vice squad, who had a police car and was about to start his nightly round.

There followed a tour of points of various interest, of which you may hear more another day, including a street where the nickels tapping on the window-panes sounded, as they say, like hail, and in one place a lady in negligee—a very pretty lady and of intellectual taste—sat before a large window with a reading lamp at her shoulder, smiling hospitably over the top of a book. A coed studying her lessons at 2:30 in the morning.

• • • •

AT 4 O'CLOCK your correspondent had seen the night side of the city which has avoided pretense and is under the government and discipline of a strong political machine, which, either defiant or obedient to a mandate of the people, regards gambling and the vice business as legitimate enterprise.

There were crowded and stifling rooms in which mostly colored men and women, bug-eyed with excitement and gin, leaned over the sideboards of the crap tables betting nickels and quarters on the cubes and others where white men in overalls and boots were doing much the same.

There had been house girls, far along in their drinks by then, moving among the tables and hanging from the bars over grog that could be used to blow safes, and keeno parlors of the most elaborate kind, for keeno in its various guises seems to have become an obsession everywhere.

In the morning there followed an interview with Mr. Bryce B. Smith, the mayor, who is a millionaire, and Henry F. McElroy, the city manager, a tight-fisted little Iowa Scot who quarrels over requisitions and appropriations, with Mr. Higgins present in the office.

• • • •

IN THE COURSE OF the conversation, which consisted largely of boasting by Mr. McElroy of the city's credit and the decline of crime and the insurance rate, and statistics offered in support, Mr. McElroy came to the point of stating frankly that Kansas City is a machine or gang town, run by the organization of Tom Pendergast, and of defending her night life on the ground of public demand.

The public never had had a chance to vote on a proposition to legalize a trade in gambling and prostitution as open as the grocery business, but the citizens did know what the machine stood for and gave the machine enough votes to indorse the system, even if the fraudulent votes were thrown out. Any time the citizens want to change this, Mr. McElroy said, they can express their preference at the polls, although it must be conceded that the factor of fraud might obscure their desires.

Mr. Higgins was sitting by nodding at Mr. McElroy's statement of administration policy, which amounted to an affirmation of orders to let the boys and girls alone—provided, of course, that there be no sticking or shooting—and that they stay within certain prescribed zones of operation. Kansas City, it seems, always has been an open town, and a cattle market man remarked afterward that on a few regrettable occasions when efforts had been made to prevent gambling and unchastity the livestock market showed an abrupt decline, as the cattlemen pushed right on past to Chicago to sell their pets and indulge in a little rejoicing.

Mr. McElroy had many facts on his side, and he seemed sincere and honest up to the last of the interview, when he said something that spoiled everything, as one bug may ruin a whole bowl of consomme.

Mr. McElroy said the machine took absolutely no graft from the gambling houses and brothels of Kansas City, at which point Mr. Higgins coughed politely, blinked behind his glasses and looked at the ceiling.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Allergic.

Allergic! There's a word much overworked—
But yesterday not used by any one;
Today applied to every ailment known—
And used from dawn until the day is done.

Do you have spots before the eyes, my friend?
Have you lost weight, or do you get too fat?
Do you have colds, salt-rheum or housemaid's knee?
Then you're allergic, sir, to this or that.

How are your arches, mister? Have they dropped?
Have you a tendency to croup or gout?
Have you the hiccoughs, asthma, or the mumps?—
You are allergic, mister, there no doubt.

I know a man who lives near a garage—
He's always feeling low and in the dumps;
The doctor says he is allergic to

Another lives above a bakery—
He's having difficulties with his eyes;
They think the fellow is allergic to

You feel all gone and don't know what it is,
And can't explain why life seems, oh, so flat!
It may be you're allergic to the dog,
The goldfish, the canary or the cat!

Your wife has not been up to snuff of late—
She is depressed, despondent and quite blue;
It's more than possible the trouble is
The lady is allergic, sir, to you!

Your little boy is feeling out of sorts—
Allergic he may be to griddle cakes,
To apple fritters, lollipops or school,
Or sausages, the moon or burning brakes.

Your daughter has been flat in bed a month—
She's positive she fell and broke both legs;
The doctor says she's just allergic to

L'envoi.

A big truck ran me down the other day
And slammed me up against a granite wall . . .
"It's nothing," said the medico, "you're just Allergic to our traffic, that is all!"

The Real Trouble.

A Springneld, Mass., man has invented a golf ball that will look larger than it really is, thus making it easier to hit. What bothers most golfers, however, is why the inventor of cups on the putting greens made them look smaller than they are.

Epic Of Water

By Elmer T. Peterson.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Los Angeles.

THE WEST COAST has been receiving a thorough drenching to the extent that disastrous floods have occurred in some districts. Even in Los Angeles, one of the dryest regions except the true desert areas, streets have been flooded. This recurrent phenomenon serves to dramatize the unusual climatic aspects of the whole coastal area, from Puget Sound to San Diego, including the interior valleys.

A distinctive economy has been built upon the peculiar weather conditions of the slope area, including California, Oregon, Washington and parts of Idaho, Montana and Arizona, with a total population of approximately 10,000,000 people.

There are two distinct seasons—wet and dry—about six months of each. A system of horticulture and agriculture has been built up which depends definitely upon the regularity and integrity of these seasons. It would be disastrous if there were no rain in the usual season, but it would be almost equally disastrous to many people if there were rain in the customarily dry months. For instance, such crops as prunes, raisins and dried apricots must have dry weather during the drying season. Moisture would ruin the products.

Barley And Wheat Sprout Without Water.

IN THE rainy season—say from November to May or June—it is possible to plant and mature crops like barley or wheat, without irrigation. Then there are vegetable crops like lima beans, peas and tomatoes that are partially matured during the rainy season, and, when situated on slopes directly facing the ocean, receive enough moisture from fogs to mature them, after the otherwise dry season begins.

The largest flower and vegetable seed projects in the world are located in California, and they also depend materially upon this unique climate. The long dry season, when the plants are brought to maturity and seed fruition, enables the plants to produce a maximum of seed. Artificial irrigation is used and pollenation and other processes of Nature proceed most favorably when there is no interruption by showers, winds and other accompaniments of the usual rainy season.

Certain valleys on the slope are especially adapted to the production of head lettuce, celery, carrots, endive, chicory, artichokes, cauliflower, tomatoes and other vegetables, and claim the title of "Salad Bowl of America" because literally trainloads of these vegetables are shipped out daily to all parts of the United States from these localities. Citrus fruits, white walnuts, figs, dates, avocados and other fruits are best produced with irrigation and nonfreezing temperatures and plenty of sunshine, and these furnish another important section of the economy of the Slope region.

During the dry season entire cities and towns are artificially irrigated. This brings us to the point of our story—the epic of water on the Pacific Slope.

Conservation Of Rain A Problem Of Farmers.

The annual rainfall of this area is 15 inches or more, but it all falls in the months from November to May. The great problem, therefore, is to devise means for keeping as much of this rainfall as possible, and find sources of supply in natural channels.

Before civilization arrived, Nature had a way of taking care of this. The valleys and slopes, in most cases, are of porous alluvial material, which absorbs an enormous amount of rainfall. From the higher ground seeped a constant supply of spring water, flowing into natural watercourses. The lower ground, therefore, was kept moist all summer.

When man arrived on the scene he dug and drilled wells, and almost exhausted the veins of ground water, lowering the water-table considerably. Then he began to realize the seriousness of the situation. With large cities like Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle arising, it was seen that something had to be done to make up for the loss. At the same time, of course, the tremendously increasing demands of farmers and fruit-raisers for irrigation made the problem even more serious.

Therefore, the impounding and distribution of countless billions of gallons of water has become the greatest single factor in the growth of the Pacific Slope, which is constantly increasing its population because of the favorable climate and the facilities for commerce on the Pacific.

From a national point of view it is argued that no more productive land is needed. The agricultural and horticultural area is already larger than necessary for domestic production and consumption. But this argument does not deter the West Coast people, for they are looking out for their own interests. And so they go right ahead, promoting such huge projects as Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee, Bonneville, the All-American Canal and the Central Valley projects.

When all these projects are completed and under way, the Pacific Slope area will be by far the greatest artificially watered area on the face of the earth.

Central Valley Project Overshadowed By Others.

MUCH HAS BEEN written of the spectacular Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee and Bonneville projects, but perhaps not as much is known, in the country as a whole, about the Central Valley project, the Parker Dam and the All-American Canal.

Two large rivers flow into San Francisco Bay—the Sacramento, coming from the east and north, and the San Joaquin, coming from the southeast. They join forces in the midst of the Central Valley.

The unique feature of this project is that surplus water from the Sacramento will be used to augment the natural supply of the San Joaquin River. It will be transported from the great Shasta Dam, at the north end of the valley, by aqueduct and pumping plants, to a point south of Modesto, where it will be released for irrigation. That will do for a part of the year. For another part of the year, the water from the Sacramento will be allowed to flow into the San Joaquin and back up the water southward, for the use of the southern part of the great valley. The release of this water will also serve to hold back salt water from the bay, thereby saving crops and other resources estimated worth about $150,000,000 a year.

It is roughly estimated that the value of the entire Central Valley project to the State of California in a single year will be more than what the project will cost, which is $170,000,000. This cost will be self-liquidating, through sale of water rights and power.

The Parker Dam, to augment the water supply of the city of Los Angeles, will be finished in 1939. It is planned to give adequate supply even when Los Angeles has grown to be a city of several million. It will carry a billion gallons of water a day from the Colorado River to the Los Angeles district. It is in its fifth year of construction and is 70 per cent completed.

The All-American Canal is another Colorado River by-product, being under construction in the Imperial Valley. It is designed to obviate floods in the district and will also make one of the largest irrigation districts in America. It, also, is planned to be self-liquidating.

Dam Designed To Lift Water Table Of Region.

ONE OF the interesting and somewhat unusual phases of the general program to conserve water resources is the dam that is built, not so much to hold water in a reservoir as to cause rainfall to seep into the ground and raise the water table.

Such a project is to be built in the Santa Maria Valley of northern Santa Barbara County. Smaller projects of similar nature are being built in the various mountain ranges. The mountains, because they are cold in winter, form a barrier to the eastward moving currents of moisture-laden air from the Pacific, and cause condensation. The problem for man is to hold the water on the higher levels until it has a chance to seep into the ground, where it finds natural storage until it is pumped from wells in the dry season.

The high Sierras, of course, are the prolific sources, but the minor ranges are also highly useful in the general economy of the area.

The foregoing projects, added to the existing projects that supply San Francisco and other coast cities, Grand Coulee Dam, Bonneville and other enterprises, will form a combination, in a few years, that will be so huge that it will amply justify one more application of the much-abused word "epic."

The Soviet State

By John T. Appleby

An Oligarchic Organization.

THE SOVIET SYSTEM of government is unique at the present day. Claiming to be the most democratic government in the world, it emerges from Dr. Harper's concise and objective analysis as a highly organized oligarchy. In spite of the recent much-heralded elections by secret ballots, real power is invested only in the proportionately small number of active members of the Communist Party—"The Party," for, needless to say, there is only one party in the Soviet Union.

Party members are the directing forces of all organizations. "The party line" is the authoritative policy of the Soviet government. In its formulation, a process of centralization has been increasingly in effect. Theoretically, the party line is determined by the party congresses. Originally held every two years, these congresses have of late met at increasingly rare intervals, the last one having taken place four years ago.

In the intervals between congresses, policy is determined and enforced by a central committee of 71 members, elected by the congress and meeting three or four times a year. In the intervals between these meetings—and here we arrive at the ultimate source of all power and authority—the government is directed by a political bureau of 11 members, with Stalin as its chairman.

• • • •

THUS THERE ARE two parallel systems within the Soviet government. The various party organizations formulate and administer the party line by which the nation is governed, while the functions of the elective bodies, whose leading spirits are of course party members, are to applaud the party decisions and put them into practice. Criticism of party measures is encouraged, but by criticism is meant not criticism of the measures themselves, for that constitutes high treason, but a consideration of the most effective means of putting them into operation. Higher bodies may criticize the members and actions of the lower bodies, but not vice versa.

If this does not constitute an oligarchy, it can only mean that the word—like "democracy," "criticism" and "freedom"—has taken on a new meaning in the Soviet philosophy.

Dr. Harper examines the Soviet system not only in the light of the actual wording of official decrees, which are often misleading, but also from the point of view of the enforcement of those decrees. In this unbiased and altogether admirable volume he has traced the evolution of the present system of government and outlined the fundamentals which underlie the Communist theory of the state and of society. The author points out that, although the Soviet government is a fluid thing, changing constantly as new conditions arise, its ultimate objective and its basic principles have remained the same.

• • • •

WHATEVER MAY BE one's opinion of the Soviet system as a whole, one cannot help admiring the leaders of that troubled country for their resolute endeavors to put their own house into order, even with violent and often tyrannical methods, rather than to divert the people's attention from unsatisfactory conditions at home by stirring up trouble abroad. At a time when most European governments seem to exist only for the purpose of meddling in other nations' affairs, the Soviet Union is exerting all its energies to achieving a new social order.

It is undeniable that the Soviet Union is the strongest single factor for peace in the world. Its mighty army, built consciously on the realistic assumption that sooner or later the Fascist powers will provoke war, is the only effective curb on the maniacal war-screams of Hitler and Mussolini. Its consistent policy for peace and its readiness to enter into nonaggression pacts, which the Soviets apparently regard as something more than mere scraps of paper, might well serve as models for other great nations whose vacillating foreign policies have made them objects of contempt and ill-concealed derision.

Unhappy Spain

By A. Curtis Wilgus

WHEN AN AUTHORITY speaks, scholars listen; and when that authority deals with a country that is constantly in the news today, the world reads what he has to say, even though it is rather hard going at times. Prof. Peers has won a wide reputation by his works on Spain; one of the best and most recent of his books being "The Spanish Tragedy," which should be read by all who wish a short cut to a better comprehension of present conditions in the Iberian Peninsula.

To the outside observer, Spain is slowly bleeding to death, and the tragedy is being hastened considerably by the interference of certain European nations which wish to impose their theories of government, and to try out their theories of warfare. Perhaps no truer description of Spain's past 300 years has been penned than that by the great Jose Ortega y Gasset, when he said, that after a "long coma of egotism and idiocy," the Spaniards "are not so much a people as a cloud of dust that was left hovering in the air when a great people went galloping down the high road of history."

• • • •

FEW PERSONS understand—and fewer attempt to understand—the political, social, religious and economic backgrounds which lie behind present-day Spanish history. In his numerous writings Dr. Peers has attempted to provide the answers. Thus in his latest volume he treats that section of Spain called Catalonia, which contains somewhat less than one-fourth of the population of the country and which, with the City of Barcelona, occupies a key position in the present civil war. Beginning with Catalonia as a rising, and finally a great, medieval state, Prof. Peers traces in detail its union with Aragon, its separation from that province, its struggle for autonomy, which was granted in 1932 by the Spanish Republic, and its probable future.

More than half of the book deals with the period since 1860 when Catalonia began its modern struggle toward solidarity. Throughout the ages blood has been liberally shed, and political, religious and economic factors have influenced every step of its slow climb up the ladder of historical progress. Yet this is only one of many political unities which go to make up the state called Spain. Let us hope that Prof. Peers will be inclined to deal with other sections and with other confusing cross-currents in Spanish history as thoroughly as he has with this.

State Of Mind

Broadway is the place where Ina Claire socked Jed Harris in the eye. And where Louis Wolheim walked bare-chested and hairy down the street with nothing on but his pants (What Price Glory?). It is the place of cheap boarding houses where bleached and garrulous ancients cook vegetables from Paddy's market over a gas grate in their rooms and walk around in pink kimonos and say, "But, my dear, you should have seen me in 'Hamlet.'" And the place where Maxwell Anderson tries to be better than Eugene O'Neill and William Shakespeare has the most consistent success of them all.

It also is the place where Hollywood stars must stand on their own and often don't, and names are made in the space of three hours . . . where the automats are full of slugs, and everybody calls everybody else "dear" and slips the knife delicately into the back . . . where the standard greeting is, "My dear you were wonderful," and the standard reply is, "My dear, I was wonderful," and the saddest words are "They cut my lines" . . .

It is furthermore a combination of poetry and hard cash, and of hysteria, megalomania, and delusions of grandeur; it is a nostalgia, and beggars outside the door in tuxedos, and paper roses . . . It has, in short, little to do with a certain street that goes by the same name, because in essence it is a state of mind.

Tom McCarthy

Small Talk.

A TENSE bit of drama is enacted, daily, in the room which houses the Department of Commerce Aquarium. Between 8:30 and 9 a. m., a sober-faced executive of the Bureau of Air Commerce emerges from the adjoining cafeteria.

McCARTHY.

There is nothing particularly noteworthy in his course across the room, except possibly the determination in his stride.—Daily, with the regularity of a Mohammedan performing his rite of gesturing to the East, he pauses before the tank which houses the piranhas, man-eating South American fish.

The executive then proceeds to toss dignity to the winds, and with the gusto of a small boy throwing spit-balls, he waves his hat, newspaper, or whatever is handy, in front of the jut-jawed fish. At times, even hissing a bit, he engages in making horrible faces before the man-eaters, until they have been goaded to a tail-lashing, jaw-snapping fury.

When the fish have been sufficiently exercised, and he himself has begun to pant, he continues merrily on his way, with a buoyant step and a cherubic smile. He holds that his morning brush with the man-eaters (which are barely the size of his own hands), leaves him in fine fettle for a day's work.

For the angry-eyed fish, it may be said, that they have come to expect their morning altercation, and that they speed toward the glass front of their tank, virtually foaming at the mouth, before the executive has had time to ready himself for action, before them.

HE'S the son of a gentleman whose name and political exploits are nationally famous. And there was something somber in his manner as he downed the last bit of his Scotch at a Connecticut avenue night club, recently.

Pulling from his pocket a roll of bills made up in tens and twenties, he tendered one to the waiter in payment for his check. And as the waiter turned to leave, he remarked, in a tone freighted with melancholy, "Boy, we may not have much fun . . . but we sure got a lot of money!"

CARROL HICKMAN, in charge of the information bureau at Southeastern University, here in the District, reports a downright creepy encounter. The woman in the case was well dressed, and she suddenly appeared in the office of the school.

"You have a nice office here," she remarked.

"Yes, indeed," said Mr. Hickman, ready to be as informative as his position demands. "What can I do for you?"

"You have a nice school here, too," she said.

"Thank you," said Mr. Hickman. "Now, if there's anything I can do——?"

"Do any of the students dance?" the woman inquired.

"I guess so," said Hickman.

"I dance too," she said.

"Do you?" said Hickman, politely enough.

"Oh, yes," she said. "I dance very well indeed. Thank you for being so helpful." And with that she was gone.

Mr. Hickman is still holding onto his information job, but it took him a day or two to get over the incident. He says that he feels she was just "a little bit peculiar."

SHE is a prominent member of the local Army and Navy set, but she has Mr. Roy Bell, a keeper at the District Zoo, rather worried.

Mr. Bell regretfully informed her that they didn't have a mongoose.

"Oh, but that's too bad," she said. "You see I had a mongoose when I was in the Philippines. I had him for a pet!"

"Aren't those the things which they use for fighting cobra snakes?" Mr. Bell asked, somewhat appalled at the lady's interest.

"Yes," she said, "but they make wonderful pets. I know dear Nicky never bit me. He used to come up and chuck me under the chin with his little nose, when I was sleeping."

Mr. Bell affirms that in 15 years as an animal keeper he has never heard of anything like it.

BUSINESS literally goes on a sit-down strike every day in a Seventeenth street tailoring establishment during the hour when blood-curdling dramas for children take over the airways.

A customer reports that the proprietor seats himself grimly before his radio receiver at that time and with the intensity of a Hindu sun worshiper he gazes at the speaker until the broadcast has come to an end. Customers are often startled, it is said, and the assistant is becoming worried.

IT IS reliably understood that the broadcast rehearsal of the National Symphony Orchestra, under Hans Kindler's direction, last Saturday won many new friends for the classics.

The microphone has been so placed that Mr. Kindler's comments to individual members of the orchestra could be quite clearly heard. The Federal Diary

Registered In U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

The principle that low wages and poor health go hand in hand—as recently expressed by the Public Health Service—moves at least two Federal employe organizations to renewed efforts to obtain a $1,500 minimum wage for Federal workers. The subject was broached the other night at the U. F. W. A. mass meeting, and was dampened, a little, by Representative Ramspeck who believed the Congress might be slow in going above $1,200. . . .

The Society of Virginia—the largest State Society in Washington with hundreds of Federal employes on its roster—goes Colonial tonight for a glamorous hour. At its fancy dress ball, in the Willard Hotel, the members will re-enact Virginia's ratification of the new Constitution which Washington did so much to make possible at the Philadelphia Convention of 1787. . . .

Many of those participating will be direct descendants of the men who had part in the historic events. Justice John Marshall will speak through his great-great-grandson, Attorney Jack A. Marshall. George Mason will again oppose the Constitution, through the voice of his great-great-grandson, Attorney Rice Howe. (Incidentally, Mason wasn't satisfied until they put a Bill of Rights in the document.)

George Washington will be portrayed by I. Chanee Buchanan; Mrs. Washington will be represented by Mrs. Richard A. Allen. Others, performing under direction of T. S. Settle, will be: Walter A. Fowler, as Patrick Henry; Robert J. Noell, as James Madison; T. F. Stuart, as Gov. Edmund Randolph; James A. Somerville, as Edmund Pendleton; W. P. Lipscomb, as Secretary John Beckley; Joseph Haley, as George Nicholas; Fred P. Myers, as Benjamin Harrison; Larry C. Arnett, as John Tyler; William Bartle, as James Monroe; W. S. Cheatham, as Gen. Lighthorse Harry Lee; Helen Tarry Gleason, as Columbia; William Barbee, as Courier. Mrs. Martha Fitzhugh will act as soloist and director of the musical program. Invitations are being extended by Col. Edwin A. Halsey, the society president and Secretary of the Senate.

Kenna-Main Post 37, American Legion, (composed of St. Elizabeths Hospital employes), holds its first benefit dance tonight, beginning at 8:30, in Hitchcock Hall . . . Also, Agriculture Local No. 2, U. F. W. A., sponsors a dance at the Hayloft tonight. There will be free beer and pretzels. . . .

A contributor writes in: "The early history of the Patent Office is one of the best arguments in favor of a trained permanent personnel in Governmental offices." And continuing:

"Patents were issued as early as 1790, but the Patent Office was not organized until 1803. Prior to the creation of the office, the work was handled by the chief clerk of the Department of State. As patents were issued at the rate of one a week, the work was light. In 1803, the Patent Office was organized as a bureau in the State Department. William Thornton was appointed by Jefferson as the clerk of patents; and in 1819 Thornton was given the title of superintendent, which he held at the time of his death in 1827.

"For many years Thornton had only one clerk, William Elliot, who was appointed prior to 1816 and continued in the service until shortly after Thornton's death. He was unofficially termed the principal clerk of the office. During this period there were two men who served as messenger, Benjamin Fenwick, prior to 1920, and Robert W. Fenwick thereafter.

"Shortly before Thornton's death he appointed an additional clerk, one Alexander McIntyre. Other than the change of messenger, this was the only appointment in the office in 20 years. Thornton represented the highest type of government official. Highly educated, he was at various times a physician, a scientist, an author, an architect (and designer of the Capitol in this city), a statesman (Commissioner of the City of Washington), an inventor (who held 7 patents) and a gentleman. Upon Thornton's death, Dr. T. P. Jones was appointed superintendent, but was removed after a few months by President Jackson to make room for a spoilsman.

"The spoilsman started making trouble as soon as he took office. His first act was to audit the accounts of his predecessors, file charges against them, and then, before any answers were possible, to burn many of the records upon which the former superintendents or their friends could rely for defense. Former Chief Clerk Elliot was still living, and came to the rescue of Thornton, and the matter soon was dropped.

"In December, 1833, the spoilsman received a dose of his own medicine. William P. Elliot, son of the former chief clerk, filed charges against the spoilsman, specifying that (1) the spoilsman issued patents for the same invention to several different persons, (2), the record books in which new applications were listed was not maintained, (3), the spoilsman had destroyed all correspondence of the previous 40 years, and (4), total incompetency to discharge the duties of the office."

(We pause from our contributor's narrative long enough to say that this was certainly a lovely state of affairs.)

The charges were investigated by the chief clerk of the State Department. During the investigation it developed that the spoilsman had refused to furnish either a stove or a chair to clerks employed in unheated rooms in the winter. They managed to hold the spoilsman in office through Jackson's Administration, but when Jackson went, so did the spoilsman."

U. S. Study Scores Hiring of Women To Save Men's Pay

More women textile workers were involved in strikes last year than any other feminine industrial group, the Women's Bureau reported yesterday. Other centers of labor troubles were cigar factories, laundries and clothing factories which employ women.

The report pointed out that it is difficult to determine the trend of employment among women.

"While on the one hand women have been forced out of the ranks of the gainful workers by the pressure of the unemployed, on the other hand there has developed the unsound practice of replacing men with women at a lower wage rate, a practice harmful to the interests of all," said Director Mary Anderson.

Detailed reports to be made later this year by the bureau will include surveys on effects of minimum wage legislation, the problem of unattached women on relief and a study of women's legal status.

Tax Experts To Address Bar Clinic Saturday

Morris Heads Speakers for Forum on U. S. Revenue Program.

A tax clinic, to be addressed by James W. Morris, Assistant Attorney General in charge of taxation; John P. Wenchel, assistant general counsel of the Treasury, and other governmental and private tax experts, will be held by the committee on Federal taxation of the American Bar Association at the Willard Saturday.

Forum discussions are scheduled for the following topics: (1) does the public interest require that the text of our income tax law be as complicated as it is at present; (2) does the Government profit by the legislative policy of limiting deductions for capital losses without putting corresponding limitations on the taxing of capital gains; (3) how may dealings between officials and taxpayers be made more effective for promptly disposing of controversies; and (4) proposed revision of revenue laws.

Speakers will include E. Barrett Prettyman, former general counsel, Bureau of Internal Revenue; Mabel Walker Willebrandt, former Assistant Attorney General; Charles T. Russell, deputy commissioner of internal revenue in charge of the income tax unit; Prof. Roger Traynor, consulting expert, United States Treasury; Jacob Mertens, jr., and Franklin S. Edmonds.

Crowd Sees Art Exhibit Of Children

Washington Gallery Display Attracts D. C. Notables.

Mrs. George Garret, Vice Chairman, Greets Guests.

A distinguished group attended the fourth exhibit of the Washington Gallery of the Museum of Modern Art yesterday afternoon. The showing was an unusually fine one of portraits of children, ranging over a period of years from Goya's famous little boy in a red suit, from the Jules Bache collection, to the modern "Girl in Communion Dress," painted and owned by Boutet de Monvel.

There are several examples from Washington collections. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss have loaned a Degas and a Renoir; the Phillips Memorial Gallery is represented; Dwight Davis lent his "Boy With a Flute," by Frans Hals, and Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Laughlin exhibit a portrait of their daughter, the former Gertrude Laughlin, now Mrs. Hubert Chanler. This work is by de Lazlo.

John Garretts Also Represented

Mr. and Mrs. John Garrett, of Baltimore, loaned a handsome child's head by Maurice Sterne. Mr. Garrett, former United States Ambassador to Italy, is now in Palm Beach, where he and Mrs. Garrett have as guests the Italian Ambassador and Donna Matilde de Suvich.

Other painters represented in the exhibition include George Bellows, Alexander Brook, Mary Cassatt, Andre Derain, Greuze, Vigee Lebrun, Fragonard and the late Gari Melchers, a Virginian whose painting, "The Doll," is of an appealing ugliness.

Mrs. Dwight Davis, chairman of the gallery, returned to Washington from her Florida plantation in time to help arrange the paintings. She will remain here for several months. Yesterday Mrs. Davis was superlatively chic in a full skirted purple silk dress with a wide belt; a sable cape, and a small brown hat trimmed with sable.

The vice chairman of the Gallery, Mrs. George Garrett, also was present to welcome the guests. She wore a silver fox cape over her black frock, and a peaked black hat trimmed with small pink bows.

Belins Entertain At Luncheon

Mr. and Mrs. F. Lammot Belin, who entertained at luncheon beforehand, arrived at the exhibit with their guests. Mrs. Belin was dressed in brown with a sable cape.

Others there were the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court and Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Owen J. Roberts and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Roberts; Mrs. Truxton Beale, Mrs. George T. Pettingill who was accompanied by Mrs. Henry L. Roosevelt and Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Phillips, prominent art patrons; Edward Weintal, Miss Sibills Skidelsky, Miss Ella O'Day who is here visiting her mother, Representative Caroline O'Day, and Mrs. Herbert Feis, accompanied by her small daughter, who looked as though she might have sat for one of the portraits herself.

THE SHOWING of private movies is becoming a favorite indoor recreation of members of society here. Recently Mrs. Robert Low Bacon and Mrs. Jouett Shouse ran off some films at the home of Mrs. Bacon, and tomorrow they will show some more reels at Mrs. Shouse's home in Georgetown at 4:30. Mr. and Mrs. Shouse ground diligently away at the camera during their European tour this summer, when they visited France, Austria and Czechoslovakia. The Bacon films also show scenes on the Continent.

DUDLEY HARMON.

Mrs. Shouse returned on Saturday from a trip to Cape Cod, an excellent place to get away from it all in the winter, although this New England peninsula has shown signs of becoming "smart" during recent summers. En route to Washington, Mrs. Shouse stopped off in New York to address a meeting of the New York chapter of the American Institute of Chemists. In addition to her social activities, Mrs. Shouse has irons in many a more serious fire and is chairman of the board of directors of the Institute of Women's Professional Relations, which investigates jobs for women.

Committee Chairman.

"Hello . . . yes, Mrs. Strong . . . oh, that's all right, I wasn't doing a thing . . . . What? . . . Well, of course, I'd be glad to do anything I could for you . . . chairman of the ways and means committee? . . . Oh, Mrs. Strong! I couldn't think of it! I'm so TERRIBLY busy . . .

"No, really I mean it. I'm simply rushed to death . . . No, you see I've definitely made up my mind to get out of club work this year. My doctor says . . . No, here's my situation, Mrs. Strong. I've simply got to get out of things and give a little more time to my family . . . no, really, my husband's very firm on the matter . . .

"Oh, yes, of course, I see your point . . . yes, I know somebody has to do the work, but don't you think we ought to give some of the new members a chance? . . . What? . . . Oh, that's awfully nice of you to say that . . . Yes, I know, but there surely must be lots of other women who are dependable.

"Oh, no, Mrs. Strong, it isn't that I want to let you down, but if it were just some other committee than the ways and means . . . Oh, yes, I realize it's the most important committee . . . yer, I know you've got to have a good woman at the head of it, but there are plenty of others . . . Oh, that's so sweet of you to say that!

"Oh, yes, I agree with you. We must keep up the standards of the club . . . Only, you see, well my doctor says I simply must let up somewhere . . . What? . . . Oh, Mrs. Strong you wouldn't call ME a representative woman . . . well I mean in the sense of being socially important . . . well, that's awfully nice of you, but I can't see that MY name would add anything . . . Oh Mrs. Strong, you embarrass me!

"What? . . . No really, I'm going to have to be firm about this. I promised my doctor . . . Yes, I know, but no matter what kind of a committee you have, the chairman always has to do all the work . . . What . . .Oh no, really, I'm not a good executive at all . . . No! No! No! Now please don't say that! I'm not a bit wonderful?

"You do? . . . That's awfully sweet of you to feel that way, Mrs. Strong. I'm afraid I'm a terribly weak reed for anybody to lean on . . . Oh no, really I'm not a tower of strength . . .No, now please don't think I want to fail you . . . No, of course I want your administration to succeed . . . Well, I tell you what, I'll serve on the ways and means committee if you'll just get someone else to be chairman.

"No, it's just the responsibility . . . No, I'm really willing to work awfully hard on the committee . . . What? . . . Who said that? . . . Not Mrs. Powers! . . . The State president! . . . She really said that? . . . How lovely!

"Well, I certainly never thought of myself as a 'born leader'. But of course I'm terribly flattered that anyone else would think so . . . What? . . . You do? . . . Oh, Mrs. Strong, you embarrass me!

"Oh yes, I know people that can lead ought to lead, but—well really I'm not sure that I can . . . Now isn't that nice of you! . . . Anyway, there are so many other women . . . What? . . . Oh, Mrs. Strong!

"Well, of course I'd do anything for the good of the club, but . . . What? . . . They do? . . . Oh I'm so glad all the women DO feel that way about me, but—Oh no, no, now please don't say that . . . Oh, I haven't any wonderful personality at all. I'm just . . .

"Yes, but there really are others who can do it just as well . . . Oh Mrs. Strong, don't say THAT . . . Oh but that really isn't true . . . Oh really you embarrass me! . . . Oh MRS. STRONG! . . . Well I tell you, I guess maybe this time, well—I'll take it. But I don't know what on earth I'm going to tell my doctor."

Senate Wives May Form Club To Make Rugs

Mrs. John E. Miller Introduces Hooking Among D. C. Women.

By Genevieve Reynolds.

WHEN the Senate wives meet for luncheon each Tuesday, conversation no longer concerns knitting and politics but the making of hooked rugs. This enthusiasm for the revival of Colonial rug-making was stimulated by Mrs. John E. Miller, wife of the newly-elected Senator from Arkansas.

Mrs. Miller's own interest in hooked rugs, which she has transmitted to her friends and neighbors in the Capitol, began in her home town of Searcy two years ago as an outgrowth of one woman's idea. This woman, Mrs. Harry King, of Searcy, started the movement as a hobby after reading a book on Colonial rug designs. She in turn began to experiment with designs, colors and fabrics. These were shown to her friends, who insisted that she draw patterns for them.

Interest in the hobby spread so rapidly that a "hooking" club was organized there. Later the women in three other towns—Jonesboro, Little Rock and Augusta—banded together in a similar club. And plans are now being formulated to organize a "hooking" club in the District of Columbia.

Examples Shown Here.

Once each week members of the four clubs in Arkansas interchange visits. Members of the club go to the home of one of the group, take their materials and work all day. Usually the hostess serves lunch. The time is spent in criticizing constructively, exchanging ideas and materials.

So vitally interested have these women become in their projects that Mrs. Miller is making definite arrangements to exhibit the hooked rugs in the Arkansas State Building at the New York World's Fair in 1939. Into this exhibit, along with many others, will go the works of Mrs. Miller and those of her home town friends who organized the first club. Three of those members, Mrs. T. A. Watkins, Mrs. E. N. Reed and Mrs. Ed Johnson, have sent samples of their work to be shown to the proposed District of Columbia members.

Mrs. Harry King, who originates all the patterns for the women of Arkansas, first draws the design on a large piece of brown or white wrapping paper and transfers it to a stencil board and thence to a burlap cloth that has been cut in the desired shape and size. Materials used for weaving the rugs may be as costly or as inexpensive as you choose. Wool threads or strips of any woolen fabric may be utilized. Real flowers furnish inspiration for delicate colors and shades in the rugs. All the patterns are adaptations of those used in the early colonial hooked rugs that have been intermittently popular since the eighteenth century. The patterns usually selected are the scroll, flower garden, governor's garden, pecket (tree design) and nosegay.

For her own rug, Mrs. Miller chose a combination of the scroll and flower garden. Something more than beautiful threads are woven into this intricately designed rug, namely, memories of many years. Each flower brings back some personal recollection. Strips of old bathing suits, sweaters, bath robes and blankets furnished the threads with which Mrs. Miller worked. An old woolen bath robe that belonged to her daughter as a child and had long been discarded, yielded yarn for the blue bells in the rug. A friend contributed a worn-out lavendar coat that made beautiful gladiolas. An old ragged blanket that she and her husband bought when they first started keeping house forms the background of the vari-colored, individual rug.

The Personal Touch.

Just as Mrs. Miller weaves into her rugs incidents and personalities dear to her memory, so did the women of the early eighteenth century, who first made hooked rugs to adorn the floor of their bare homes along the Eastern sea board, weave symbols of their daily life. It is this indefinable personal touch of the makers that give these home-made rugs their chief charm.

These early women, too, used strips of old clothes and tiny pieces of left-over yarns to make rugs which showed originality in pattern and artistic blending of colors. But rug-making was more than a hobby for them. It was a matter of adding comfort and color to homes with limited means and materials. European rugs were too expensive to import and there were no rug factories in America.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Boy of 20 Falls in Love at First Sight; How to Promote Acquaintanceship With Girl, He Asks.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a boy 20 years old and have a good job with good pay. About a month ago, my best friend (he is a boy of 18) and I met two girls. One, about 19, was very pretty. The other, about 15, was not so pretty. I knew immediately that, in the older girl, I had met love at first sight. We took the girls home and made a date for that night, to go walking.

• • • •

After we left them, I told my friend how I felt about this girl, and he said he would "give me a break." We agreed that he would pair off with the younger girl, and let me take the other one. But, as it turned out, the younger girl asked me to be her escort; so, out of politeness, I obliged. During the evening, we made plans for another date and naturally I had to ask the one I was with.

• • • •

Well, I was very unhappy about the whole thing and my friend promised that after this he would not ask "my girl" out any more, so that I could get an inning. Our second date was about a week ago, and although the girl lives only about a block from my house, I haven't had a chance to talk with her or ask her out since. She has no telephone and whenever I see her she is with someone else—her father or mother or some friend. However, I sent her a card on St. Valentine's Day.

• • • •

I know I love this girl, and I would like to get better acquainted with her and her family. But how shall I go about it? I cannot sleep nights for thinking about her, and also I think her about all day long at work. INEXPERIENCED.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR INEXPERIENCED: Since the girl has no telephone, I can only suggest that you march boldly up to her parents' front door at some daylight hour—morning, afternoon or early evening—knock or ring, ask for Juliet, and when, as and if you find her in (and, by the way, keep on trying until you do) tell her without preamble that you are calling to ask her to do so-and-so on such-and-such an evening. It might be an invitation to go to the movies, or roller skating, or dancing, or golfing, or riding, or bowling, or to a church supper, or what-have-you. Don't ask her just to go walking. It makes you seem too unresourceful, too close-fisted, too altogether unexciting as a potential beau.

• • • •

If she declines your invitation, saying she has made other arrangements for the evening mentioned, stand your ground and ask her: "Well, when can you go? Could you make it Thursday? Or Tuesday evening of next week? If, again, she claims to be busy, and suggests no alternative evenings, I think you had better conclude your suit is hopeless; that she isn't interested; that she likes your best friend far better than she likes you, and that, very possibly, she put the younger girl up to asking for your society the first evening.

• • •

However, if she is at all interested, very likely she will promise to see you on some of the evenings suggested, and she may even ask you to come in and talk a while. If she does, you can take your choice of remaining for a half hour's pleasant talk, after which you may excuse yourself on the plea that you have work to do and must go; or you can say quite frankly, after a few minutes' chat, "By the way, are you busy this evening? If you're not, why don't you go to the movies with me tonight? There's a swell picture at Blank's, etc., etc."

• • • •

If she is cordial, don't be afraid to show your marked liking for her. But if she is distant or indifferent, don't hang on in heartsick, woebegone fashion. Take your dismissal like a man. Tell her you're sorry she can't go. Tell her, "Well, I'll be seeing you," and march off coolly again. Remember, there is nothing in the least unmanly, nothing to be ashamed of, in trying to win the company of a girl you admire, even when you fail to achieve your ambition. The only thing to be ashamed of is lack of courage to try your chances.

• • • •

Incidentally, don't count on your best friend's promoting your romance with this girl. It may be he is just as interested in her as you are, and that you are asking too much in expecting or supposing he will drop out of the picture altogether. Remember the old proverb, "All's fair in love and war," and don't ask more of him than one is warranted in asking of human nature. If you want the girl's friendship, be willing to go after it in open and above-board competition, even with your best friend. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Sponge Aid.

Keep a variety of sponges of all sizes on hand. You can use them to wash furniture, woodwork, floors, shelves and porches. They are also handy for cleaning and washing mirrors, pictures, china and bric-a-brac. Be sure to wash them out frequently in hot water and soap suds and allow them to dry in the open after use. Then rub them together, to soften them for future use.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Feb. 20.

NOWHERE on earth do Styles in Streets shift more rapidly, and sometimes sadly, than in our crossroads town. For few known reasons, the tide of fashion deserts a beautiful and spacious highway and rolls up another street which may have little or nothing to recommend it but high pressure ballyhoo from the real estate wizards.

ALICE HUGHES.

That is precisely what has happened to Riverside Drive, the broad ribbon which winds along the Hudson and heads toward Westchester County's open acres. Physically, it is the most beautiful avenue on the Island. It is banded with trees and parkways, and its windows look out across the Hudson to the winking lights of Jersey. When the fleet's in, the drive's residents have box seats for the show, for the seadogs lie in the river at its front door.

Shreds of glamor cling to the name among those who have never seen it, but the town toffs have long since deserted the drive. Grant's Tomb still stands, and so does Mr. Rockefeller's beautiful Gothic Baptist cathedral. But the "fashionable" have moved far over east. Charles Schwab's castle stands as a monument to its past glories near Seventy-second street and Riverside Drive is just the butt of sad movie jokes as the place where sailors bandy words and winks with pretty little girls when the cruisers lie in the Hudson. Sic transit gloria!

On sunny days its sidewalks and benches are filled with nursemaids and their romping charges, as well as dear old people, who, in the sunset of life, like to sit and dream and dose.

Now deserted by the tories and taken over by modest citizens, Riverside Drive is still one of our lovely and exciting places. Bitter cold when the winter winds howl, it remains one of our few streets which have horizons and a glorious view. It gives thousands of city slaves a chance at sun and sky!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—In a party-ridden city, those gilded shenanigans thrown by Publisher Conde Nast always stand out like diamonds in a coal-bin! Thus the past week was turned gala by the one he gave in honor of Ina Claire and Frederick Lonsdale, star and author, in the order named, of "One Is Enough." Freddy is the red-headed and shy author who put the British tea-cart on the stage and into the American home, while Ina is forever Ina, the sparkling Fagan girl from Washington who has captivated us these many years. The feature of Nast's genteel jamboree's is dancing in his huge pent-house room, done in Chippendale and lighted only with candles. That sight is what people 10,000 miles away dream high-chapeau New York really is. Thanks, I doubt not, to the movies!

New Spring Shoes Trimmed to Match Designs of Dresses

Paris, (U.P.).—Lines of spring shoes have radically changed for both daytime and evening wear. Bunting comes out with square fronts, backs and heels. He argues that these are smarter, more comfortable, and do away with the pinched-toes evil.

It is considered smart this season to have the trimmings on shoes match the designs on the dress. With the marked emphasis on novelty and detail this year, the shoemen have gone rampant with ideas.

By Ida Jean Kain.

WHY WORRY about overweight shortening your life by a mere 15 years when underweight can cut your life expectancy down to nothing? That cynical view of diet is taken by Ray Barnes in his "Razzing the Rapids" column, which appears in The Grand Rapids Herald. The columnist's pseudonym, Iva Mean Pain, was apparently not brought on by hunger pangs.

Since Mr. Barnes sponsors heartier meals and cautions against any exercise except for a little mild golf, we are passing his advice along to you as just what you have been looking for. This fat man's champion is too good a spokesman not to be recognized as a humorist . . . But take his suggestions as lightly as they are given, for chances are Mr. Barnes has a 46-inch beltline!

Starvation A Peril.

From now on, we're quoting . . .

Watch your waistline, sir! If you don't, it may waste away to a shadow! Then think how you'll look!

Perhaps you need a check-up. Maybe your metabolism is haywire. Maybe you exercise too much. Maybe you don't eat enough.

As for exercise—well, there's no harm in a little golf or croquet or hunting or fishing or tennis (if you can take it) or practically anything that's fun. But beware of shoveling snow off sidewalks, stoking the furnace, carrying out the ashes, putting up curtains, cleaning the kitchen walls, or raking the yard.

And by all means get enough food. It has seldom happened in the United States that people have actually died of starvation, but there are well-authenticated reports that such things have happened in some countries, and It Could Happen Here. Starvation can take 20 years off a man's life, assuming he would have lived to be 60 if he hadn't starved to death at 40.

This is simple enough if you live in a town where there is a good American-plan hotel. You should move in, get to all meals on time (or a little ahead of time) and order everything.

It is difficult in some of the bigger hotels, where you have to order each item by name, since the exertion is apt to offset the good effects of plenty of food. But you can overcome that. Get the waiter or waitress to hold the menu in one hand and point with his or her finger from one item to another. Then you simply indicate with a slight nod—or wink, as the case may be—the foods you want. The effort is very small.

IVA MEAN PAIN.

. . . Unquote!

If this is the program followed by the writer, it is easy to understand his choice of a pen name!

Picture Story of British Cabinet Crisis; Hitler Makes Threat

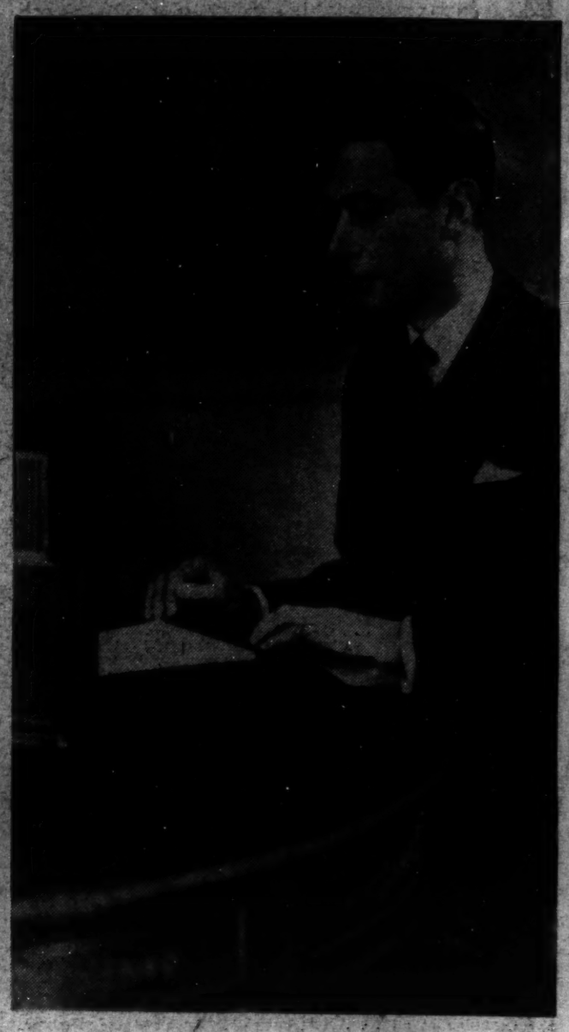
2 The 40-year-old Eden, who had been the directing force of British foreign policies since he succeeded Sir Samuel Hoare December 22, 1935, entered the stately chamber (above) where cabinet sessions are held promptly at 7:30 p. m. (3:30 p. m. E. S. T.). Briefly Eden laid his ultimatum before Prime Minister Chamberlain (inset) and—a scant four minutes later—took his hat and walked out.



3 Meanwhile, learning of the impending crisis, King George VI (shown speaking into a microphone) hurried from Windsor Castle to Buckingham Palace, where he heard of Eden's resignation and approved it . . .

4 Straight from 10 Downing Street to his own headquarters (above) in the Foreign Office Building in Whitehall went Secretary Eden to inform members of his staff of his decision. Soon came word that Viscount Cranborne (inset right) also had resigned as British undersecretary for League of Nations Affairs. It was believed Eden would be replaced by Viscount Halifax (inset left), Lord President of the Council and outstanding champion of friendship with Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler.

5 Previously before the Reichstag in Berlin's famous Kroll Opera House Fuehrer Hitler (inset) had told the world in a three-hour speech that Germany is strengthening her army to "defend the political freedom" of 10,000,000 Germans living in Austria and Czechoslovakia. The above picture of the Reichstag in session at the Kroll Opera House was taken in 1936 when Hitler ordered troops into the Rhineland.

Purge of Communists Is Ordered in Austria

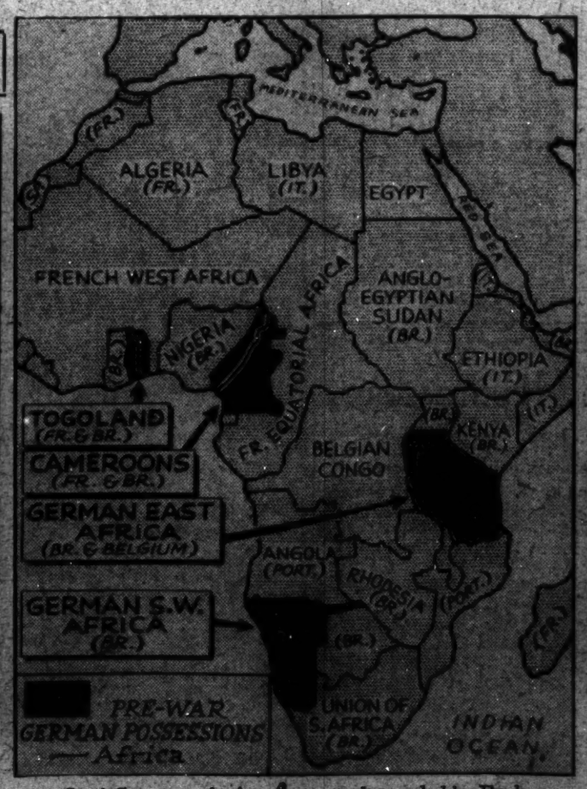
6 Forewarning of Hitler's latest move came February 17, when he conferred in Berlin with Dr. Alfred Seyss-Inquart (left) who, through pressure from Der Fuehrer, has been appointed Austrian Minister of the Interior. Through Seyss-Inquart, Austria was ordered to prepare for a sweeping anti-Communist purge as first step in bringing that nation under 100 per cent Swastika rule.



7 Lost German colonies also were demanded by Fuehrer Hitler when he made his speech yesterday. This map depicts Germany's pre-war African colonies where the two largest and richest, German Southwest Africa and German East Africa, now are dominated by England.

Three Who Won Praise From Der Fuehrer

8 Pausing in his speech to pay tribute to retired War Minister Werner von Blomberg (center) and retired Commander in Chief of the Army Werner von Fritsch (left), Hitler declared: "I honor these men who helped me reorganize the army . . . I must express appreciation of the loyal work of these leaders who, in commendable discipline, yielded their places to younger men."

9 And finally to Austrian Chancellor Kurt von Schuschnigg, Der Fuehrer extended praise for helping Nazi government to achieve a new "understanding" with its neighbor.

Five Hours of Ancient Oriental Drama Depopulate Washington Chinatown, Raise Fund for War Victims

Post Staff Photos.

All of Washington's 800 Chinese turned out yesterday afternoon, invested $1 to $5 for tickets, and sat through five hours of ancient Chinese drama. Everything was entirely informal. At left, for instance, is the orchestra, coatless. In the center, Elizabeth Louie places a carnation in her hair just before she steps on the stage. To help you pay your income tax with a smile, and in proof of the fable that money doesn't buy happiness in cellophane, my spy across the Avenue at Internal Revenue reports this queer phenomenon:

* * * *

1. People with taxable incomes are suffering from income tax jitters this fortnight.

Doris Duke pays $1,000,000

2. People without incomes big enough to be taxed are immune to these jitters.

* * * *

As an amateur psychologist, he thinks income taxpayers torture themselves needlessly between now and March 15 . . . If you'd psychoanalyze yourself you'd uncover six gnawing reasons for income tax melancholia:

* * * *

"—a free ride for each taxpayer."

1. The agony of spending money for something you can't taste, wear or kiss.

2. Arithmetic blues—the pain of struggling with rows of figures.

3. The mental fatigue of trying to understand the tax instructions and regulations.

* * * *

4. Remorse—as you wonder where last year's income went and what you've got to show for it.

5. Fear of underpaying and being penalized by the Government.

6. Fear of overpaynig, and thus penalizing yourself.

* * * *

Once you've got these six types of anguish spotted, you can tackle them one by one and conquer them.

If it will help you feel you're getting your money's worth, you can kiss a Marine corporal.

* * * *

After all, reason No. 5 is the only one that need give you any real worry . . . If you pay enough you can easily jolly yourself out of the other worries.

* * * *

I suggest that Mr. Guy Helvering, the income tax czar, also do a few trifles to brighten things for the income taxpayer:

1. By printing the tax blanks in brighter colors, with a fancy border showing soldiers, sailors, WPA workers, G-men and Federal Theater actors at work and at play.

"—for painless extraction."

2. By illustrating the blanks with pictures of some of the prettiest girls in the government service.

3. By putting an Ed Reed cartoon opposite the line where you write your total tax—a cartoon so funny, if possible, as to reduce the whole thing to one big laugh.

* * * *

Also, it would cheer taxpayers if the Government were to offer coupons and premiums:

1. For income taxpayers below $5,000 a ride on a tank or warship.

2. For citizens who pay taxes on $5,000 to $15,000, ride in an army airplane.

3. For taxpayers on $15,000 to $100,000, a ride in a submarine.

4. For taxpayers beyond $100,000, a chance to cry on the President's shoulder.

* * * *

And why doesn't Commissioner Helvering give each taxpayer a handsome official tin box to put on the radio, a box with an eagle on it in which you could drop a nickel out of every dollar for the March 15 fiesta?

And how about a lottery, with $100,000 (tax-free) for 10 taxpayers drawing the lucky numbers?

Guy Helvering.

* * * *

Anyhow, cheer up; look at the corporation income tax return, more than twice as long and ten times as complex as your individual return, and thank God you're not a corporation. Why are some people so crazy to get incorporated?

And remember that Commissioner Helvering himself pays an income tax of around $415, on his government salary alone, if he had no other income. . . . And Doris Duke pays more than a million.

Return of Winter Slated for Today

Climaxing a period of extremely unseasonal weather, Washington's week-end started off Saturday with a spring-like temperature reaching 62 at noon, worked up to a full fledged summer thunderstorm shortly before midnight and topped the spectacular exhibition with a snow, sleet and rain storm early yesterday morning.

Starting from the day's low of 34 degrees recorded at 8 a. m. yesterday, a temperamental mercury rose to 43 at 4 p. m. and is expected to drop to a low of about 26 degrees today.

Specialization Worst Failing, Town Hall Told

Dr. Overstreet Says Society Must Learn to Think 'Collectively.'

Dr. Harry O. Overstreet put philosophy to work before a Town Hall audience last night and discovered that the trouble with out society is that we're all too specialized intellectually and too self-interested emotionally.

Telling the crowd at the Rialto Theater that American were "individually intelligent but collectively dumb," Dr. Overstreet, who is head of the College of the City of New York philosophy department, declared that we're decent, kindly, intelligent people but that we live in a society that's none of these.

The reason, he decided, is that we haven't learned to think collectively or to feel collectively.

Too Many Specialists.

"We're all specialists in our little fields," he said. "We don't know anything about matters in which we all should be interested, such a fluctuating currency or taxes.

"If we're going to build a new-fashioned civilization, we've got to build it with a new-fashioned mind. We've got to be trained beyond our specialities."

Expressing the wish that a multi-millionaire would step forward with money to found a new type of educational institution, Dr. Oversteet explained what he thought mature people ought to study to attain this new-fashioned mind.

There were five fields, he said, in which he thought the modern person should be proficient—five "departments" in the ideal institution.

In his first department, "Social Understanding," a citizen would attack the problems that beset the social group—taxation, for example. The second, "Criminal Research," would give the student an idea of the "insidious criminal enterprise that goes on without our being able to detect it." He said he'd have Thomas Dewey, New York City's crack prosecutor head that department.

Propaganda Analysis.

The third branch, "Propaganda Analysis," would teach how to recognize propaganda put out by pressure groups. The fourth field was "Techniques of Co-operation." The fifth, "Cultural Perspective," would be historical in an inclusive sense. It would be a course, he said, in learning how we got to be the kind of people we are.

Dr. Oversteet declared once we learn what our society is all about we must develop a passion for community life in order to build a new kind of civilization. This community life would have to be based on the realization of the interdependability of society. "Until we develop a religion of common destiny," he said, "nothing much is going to happen about building a new society."

Overstreet told the chairman, Charles J. Brand, former co-administrator of the AAA, that what the Agriculture Department is doing is one of the most important experiments in getting people to think the new way. He cited experiences in Iowa which demonstrated that farmers are learning to think of the entire group instead of just their own good.

Naval Academy Choir Sings at D. C. Cathedral

A congregation of 2,500 persons crowded into Washington Cathedral yesterday to hear the Midshipmen's Choir of the United States Naval Academy, on its annual pilgrimage to Mount St. Alban, conduct the entire musical program at afternoon services. Guests of honor were members of the Society of Sponsors of the United States Navy.

Headed by a color guard, the 80 members of the choir, in their trim dark blue uniforms, presented a striking picture as they marched in, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," the processional hymn.

In the audience—one of the largest since the Cathedral's crossing and transept were opened—were Admiral David Foote Sellers, former superintendent of the Naval Academy, and Mrs. Sellers, and Mrs. Russell M. Langdon, of New York City, president of the Society of Sponsors of the Navy.

The Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, dean of the cathedral, stressed in his sermon the need for dreamers in a world of realists. He cited Joseph in Egypt, St. Paul and David Livingstone as among the great historical "dreamers," but, he said, "Christ was the greatest of all."

Closing prayers were offered by Canon Anson Phelps Stokes.

At the Cathedral's morning Communion service the Rev. Edward S. Dunlap spoke on "Washington as a Christian and a Churchman." Tracing Washington's religious life from boyhood, Mr. Dunlap stated that "his consciousness of divine dependence is found in his utterances, prayers, notations in his diary, orders to the army and official communications."

The Christian Church "must promote peaceful adjustment to altering conditions or the changes will come in some cataclysmic way," the Rev. Oliver J. Bart, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, said yesterday at the annual services of the Sons of the Revolution, held at the Church of the Epiphany.

Warning that the continuity of institutions such as the church is no longer "guaranteed," Dr. Hart asserted "we ignore scientific, philosophical and social changes at our peril."

Chinatown Is Deserted as Five-Hour Drama Is Performed for the Benefit of War Victims

Washington's Chinese restaurateurs, waiters and cooks shut up shop for the day and, accompanied by their wives and babies, attended a benefit performance of ancient Chinese dramas at the Rialto Theater. Proceeds went to the relief of war victims in their native land.

All 800 residents of Washington's Chinatown were there. Anyone who wasn't will be punished by ostracism, according to one Chinese.

Attendance at the performance, besides creating vacuums in many a Chinese purse (tickets sold at a $5 top) put quite a dent in Chinatown's Sunday afternoon. The plays started at 1:30 p. m. and ended five hours later.

No one fell asleep, however. Although the action of the centuries-old plays progressed in the leisurely fashion characteristic of Chinese drama, it was accompanied by music from beginning to end.

The musicians sawed away on their oriental instruments, sitting on the stage in their shirt sleeves and offering considerable contrast to the elaborately embroidered costumes of the actors. Occasionally they left the stage and returned with differently shaped instruments which seemed to sound just like the others.

Everyone wandered on and off the stage at will. The traditional property man, a stoop-shouldered little person who said nothing but looked very bewildered, strolled across the set at the most dramatic moments to change the position of a chair or a cushion.

Backstage, actors and stage hands watched the progress of the play from the wings, in full view of the audience. When they became confused as to what was going on they consulted a pink sheet divided into squares, listing the scenes in Chinese letters. As each scene ended the stage manager would check one square with his pencil.

Sometimes they skipped a scene or two to shorten the program, but the audience probably was none the wiser. In fact, a good part of the audience probably was in doubt as to when one play ended and the next began. When reporters, confused even by the English translation of the program, asked which act was going on, they were referred to the producer, who, after a moment's thought, gave them his opinion on the subject.

The troupe of 25, comprising the Chinese Musical Club of New York, included both men and women. Sometimes the men played men's parts and sometimes they dressed as women. The women in the cast were equally adept at impersonation.

All the actors are amateurs giving their services for the cause. Because of the noncommercial nature of the production, the audience did not applaud. "Their silence shows their respect," it was explained.

Laundrymen, waitresses, cooks, they leave their jobs to fill engagements all over the East. If the trip involves an absence from New York of more than a day or so, they hire friends to do their work—and pay out of their own pockets.

The costumes have been donated by old Chinese families. Sashes, slippers, and other odds and ends of apparel lay around the dressing rooms yesterday and were appropriated by any actor who thought they might add to his outfit.

One actor missed a cue while changing from one costume to another. The music heralding his entrance had begun before his head dress was in place. The crisis was averted by a throng of stage hands, make-up women and other actors who crowded into the wings and signalled the orchestra with violent "sh-h-h's."

The musicians, who had neither leader nor scores, caught on and, without a consultation, started playing something else.

The fireman stationed backstage did not like the show. "This must be my unlucky day," he said mournfully. Eddie Heath, the Rialto's stage manager, thought it was fine. For once he had no responsibility. "My only cue is the finale, which means I've got to hustle and set up a public address system for the forum," he said.

Damrosch Praises Capital Orchestra As 'Very Superior'

Dr. Walter Damrosch, famous orchestra conductor, yesterday, praised the work of Hans Kindler and the National Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Damrosch, in a letter to Corcoran Thom, president of the National Symphony Orchestra Association, said that under the baton of Dr. Kindler the orchestra had developed into a "very superior symphonic body."

"The importance of such an organization for our National Capital, which should be the headquarters of all American activities, whether industrial or artistic, cannot be overrated," Dr. Damrosch declared.

He urged support for the fund-raising campaing in which the orchestra association seeks to raise $103,000 for the 1938-39 season.

3 Faiths Stage Brotherhood Day Ceremony

Joining 2,000 American communities in celebrating National Brotherhood Day, representatives of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths yesterday gathered in the Capitol's Statuary Hall to pay tribute to Roger Williams, pioneer advocate of religious tolerance.

"The high democracy of Roger Williams has come to be held in low esteem in many parts of the present world," declared Oswald Ryan, general counsel of the Federal Power Commission.

"Wherever liberty of conscience is honored, the memory of Roger Williams will be held in reverence and will be an inspiration to all who believe in complete religious freedom and equality before the law."

Clergymen who took part in the program were the Rev. John Rustin, pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South; the Rev. Thomas R. Day, of St. Patrick's Church, and Rabbi Abram Simon, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation.

Socialism is the only cure for the grave maldistribution of American income, Leo Huberman, head of the department of social sciences in Columbia University's New College, yesterday told an audience of 200 at the Modern Forum.

Speaking on "Your Money and Mine," Prof. Huberman pointed out that in 1929, "the richest year known by the world's richest nation," more than 40 per cent of the population received only one-eighth of the national income.

Another eighth of our income for that year was enjoyed by 36,000 families at the top, he said. Dr. Huberman charged that "most of our population, both farm and city, did not even get enough to eat in the banner year of 1929."

If the 1929 income were evenly distributed every family would have received $3,000, he said.

'Bullet' Turns Out to Be Mousetrap; Real Names Prevent Suits.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Feb. 20.—Mousetraps and fly spray entered the world of art today at M. G. M. where two of the former and a pint of the latter were used for you'd-never-guess-what.

The picture was "Three Comrades," featuring Robert Taylor, Franchot Tone and Robert Young—and even they looked surprised when they discovered the use to which the master-minds had put these pest exterminators.

The stage showed a street scene in Germany, with cream puffs in a bakery window, apples on a pedd-ler's cart, and oranges in a delicatessen display. The property department sprayed all these heavily with the fly dope, to keep the extras away. Yesterday, they ate nearly two bushels of apples, and enough oranges to give the stockholders sinking hearts.

Quite a Party.

Being shot was a sequence wherein Tone met Young on the sidewalk. The latter had six bottles of cognac in a paper sack under his arm, for use at a party to celebrate Taylor's birthday. There was a riot down the street. Boom!

A bullet smashed into Young's sack, broke a bottle and caused his liquor to drip down his pants legs. That made him so mad he almost broke up the fight in the next block, single-handed.

What we couldn't understand was how M. G. M. figured it was good business to let bullets whiz past the ears of a couple of the highest-paid stars in the business—and that's where we were mistaken. They weren't bullets; they were mouse-traps.

How It Was Done.

The property department had rigged two of the traps (the three-for-a-nickle kind) in the sack. One was attached to a breakaway bottle. The other was hitched to a trigger inside the bag.

A string, which you'll never see, reached out to Young's hand. When time came for the non-existent bullet to whine past him, he yanked his string.

M. G. M. also took a lot of care in the prevention of possible libel suits in connection with the picture.

Playing Safe.

The village street, with gabled roofs and other picturesque appurtenances, had numerous saloons, tea rooms, drug stores and other shops, all with such Germanic names as Vogel and Hallback and Grau and Siegel over the doors.

The movie-makers have to be careful that way, else some folks think they've been insulted enough by seeing their names in the movies to go to court.

Little

In bringing back "Naughty Marietta" as chief feature of its new bill inaugurated yesterday, the Little Theater is not so much "reviving" an old favorite as it is presenting once again a screen operetta that has been continuously popular since its original release in February, 1935.

This is the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the stage piece by Rida Johnson Young and the late Victor Herbert, in which the co-stellar roles are sung and played by Jeanette MacDonald, in the title role, and Nelson Eddy, as Warrington. It embodies a wealth of Herbert's most tuneful and most lasting melodies, which are sung with memorable effect by two of the best voices before the public. Among the songs that will be immediately recalled are "I'm Falling in Love with Someone" and "Sweet Mystery of Life." Over and above these may mentioned "Antoinette and Anatol," "Chansonette," the "Italian Street Song," "Southern Moon," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" and "The Owl and the Polecat."

In the supporting cast will be found such names as Frank Morgan, Elsa Lancaster, in private life Mrs. Charles Laughton; Douglas Dumbrille, Joseph Cawthorne, Cecilia Parker, Walter Kingsford, Greta Mayer, Akim Tamiroff, Harold Huber and Edward Brophy—an imposing list.

"Naughty Marietta" is directed in Woody S. Van Dyke's best manner and staged with typical M-G-M opulence. It is, of course, supplemented by the customary short-reel screen auxiliaries.

Gayety

"NIGHT LIFE." William Collins presents the musical production in two acts and 21 scenes, featuring Valda and Jack Diamond, supported by George Murray, Max Furman, Alma Maiben, Winnie Garrett, Lew Benny, Al Kilbride, Dudley Douglas, Ethel DeVeaux, Mollie Winthrop and Sonia Shapez. Dance numbers devised by Beverly Carr; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John, B. C. A. A.

Comedy proves to be the predominating feature of this week's revue at the Gayety, with such funsters as Jack Diamond, Max Furman and George Murray being responsible for much of the swell entertainment that emanates from the rostrum.

This trio of funsters is in rare form this week, offering comedy that is both new and hilarious. Diamond, assisted by his charming partner, Ethel DeVeaux, is unusually good. All of his "bits" carry a real punch. Murray and Furman, too, present several new skits that are amusing and complete in detail.

The female portion of the program is dedicated to the songs and dances offered by Winnie Garrett, Alma Maiben and Valda, the last named a sepia entertainer, whose offering is nothing short of sensational.

Col. Jimmy Lake's deft hand has created some lavish settings and lighting effects, while the wardrobe of the entire company is fresh and pleasing to the eye. The "ladies of the ensemble" entertain with some worthy musical routines, and the voice of Al Kilbride adds much to the posing and ballet numbers.

Theater Guild and American Society Announce Another "Extra" Attraction

Subscriptions Will Close Tomorrow for 'I Am My Youth,' Coming to National Next Monday; President's Birthday Visitors Remember; More About 'Snow White;' Notes of the Theater and Its People.

BELL.

THE sixth play in this season's regular subscription series of the Theater Guild and the American Theater Society of Washington, at the National, will be the much-heralded and long-awaited "Yes, My Darling Daughter!" The tremendous success of this comedy in both New York and Boston has occasioned frequent postponements of the local playing date. It is now the expectation that the piece will play the Capital the last week in March.

In the meantime, another production, under the aegis of Alfred de Liagre, will be offered subscribers here as the third extra play in the present season's supposed series of six. This will be "I Am My Youth," opening at the National a week from tonight, with Frank Lawton, Charles Waldron, and Viola Roache heading the cast. Once again, this is the play about Shelley.

The subscription period for "I Am My Youth" will expire tomorrow night. All subscription orders must be received at the office of the American Theater Society, in the National Theater, by that date—which is by way of being Washington's Birthday, February 22.

So now you know that a little speed will do you no harm.

• • • • •

Incidentally, the Theater Guild already is laying production plans for the season of 1938-39, having already acquired Robert Wetzel's prize-winning play of "Fools Hill" as one of its prospective enterprises—a decision that has previously been announced in this space. The Guild also announces next year's touring plans for Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne. This celebrated starring couple—although, of course, the Guild never stars anyone—will present "Amphitryon 38" and "The Sea Gull" in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Washington, and other cities. The tour will begin on September 19 and has been booked, to date, through the beginning of the next year, meaning 1939. Since Washington saw "Amphitryon 38" before it scored a hit on Broadway, it is to be suspected that the accent will be placed on "The Sea Gull" when the Lunts play here next.

• • • •

Reverting momentarily to "I Am My Youth," it is Miss Phyllis Perlman who informs me that Washington will be the only city to see the new Ernest Pascal-Edwin Blum comedy before New York. Next Monday night's opening at the National will mark the play's premiere. After the Washington week, all being well, it will proceed directly to Broadway and the "Death Watch."

Alfred de Liagre, jr., by the way, is both producer and director of the new work and this will be the first of his productions ever to open outside New York. It was he who produced and directed "Yes, My Darling Daughter," in case you had forgotten.

Aftermaths of the President's birthday celebrations continue to bob up, even this long after the multiple event. The week-end brought to this desk handsome photographs of Mr. and Mrs. Fredric March, whom I had the pleasure of escorting on their rounds, and Eleanor Powell, who proved herself such a willing and indefatigable "trouper." Both are inscribed in terms that this column does not at all deserve and are extremely welcome additions to a large collection. Grand people, these "show folks," when you come to know them. And even if you don't.

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Walt Disney's utterly enchanting fantasy that is "packing 'em in" at RKO-Keith's, continues to inspire comment and controversy. A letter from Franklin W. Marsh, 5011 Colorado avenue northwest, an eager observer of the theater, reflects an acute scrutiny of the film.

Among other interesting things, Mr. Marsh has this to say: "There was one feature of the picture that puzzled me. The dwarfs, animals and the "peddler" queen were well-nigh perfect in conception and animation, but the Princess and her Prince Charming seemed to me not so satisfactory. At times the animation seemed 'wavery' and some drawings of the Prince in the last part of the picture were almost crude—at least to my eyes. Perhaps Disney and his artists are at their best in fantasy and their artistry does not function so well in the picturization of real people. What do you think?"

I think "Snow White" is such a completely delightful departure from every earlier type of feature-length screen entertainment that whatever minor flaws appear in it—if there are any—are so inconsequential as to be negligible in any rounded contemplation of the picture's execution and purpose.

Being hardly better informed than the most casual lay spectator in the matter of the Disney technique and methods, I am in no sense qualified to enter into a technical discussion of the manner in which the picture was made or why there may appear to be variations in the draughtsmanship revealed in the various characters. I only know that upward of 300 artists and artisans labored over the product during a period of two or three years and that an unbelievable number of drawings were necessary to achieve the final result—literally thousands of them.

It is possible that the given character was not always drawn by the same artist, or that, with an interval of many months elapsing between the first and the last drawings of a character, some discrepancies in treatment might creep in. This is merely a guess. In the present case, one guess seems to be about as good as another.

But "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" still is a miraculous piece of work and a great entertainment.

• • • •

Mr. Marsh has some further interesting ideas as to the "voices" of the drawn images. He agrees that Hoy Atwill must be "Doc," and in "Sneezy" detects the inimitable audibility of Billy Gilbert. We will find out about that when Billy comes to the Earle stage on Friday. In Dopey he perceives a deft combination of Jimmy Save and Joe Penner and in "Grumpy" a vague outline of Claude Gillingwater. Has Mr. Marsh any takers?

Speaking of worthy pictures, the announcement in the Motion Picture Herald of February 19 of the "Box-Office Champions for December," shows the national favorites to have jumped in number to seven, two over the previous month's low record of five.

The December winners, as determined by bonafide box-office statements from the key cities of the country, were "The Firefly," "Submarine D-1," "Wells Fargo," "Second Honeymoon," "Nothing Sacred," "The Awful Truth" and "Tovarich." "The Firefly" and "The Awful Truth" have been around quite a while now in this monthly tabulation.

Among the producers, the Warner Brothers were the only company to score a double in the championship listings—with "Submarine D-1" and "Tovarich." The other studios represented are Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists and Columbia.

It is worthy of passing note that all seven of the champions have been seen and approved in Washington.

• • • •

Washington Birthday matinees will be given in all the Warner Brothers' neighborhood theaters tomorrow, with special holiday attractions booked in all houses. With the exception of the Avalon, Colony and Home, the Warner residential theaters will present extra matinees today.

Intrigued by the customs of the natives in the British possessions they have touched, Mr. Dikeman, so I am told, has gone in for cork helmets, khaki shorts and riding crops. All he needs now is the horse!

Old Taylor Coat Starts Star Feud

Many humorous feuds have been started in Hollywood through the strangest of causes but Robert Taylor believes that none of the freakish causes can top his.

It's all about an old coat.

When Taylor returned from England after starring in "A Yank at Oxford," he brought along a large new wardrobe of English sport clothes, particularly coats.

But he has never worn any of the coats. Instead, he walks around the studios wearing the same old rumpled brown sport coat that he wore before he reached stardom.

So Gable, Tracy and Stewart have organized the ASTOOSC—Association for the Suppression of Taylor's Old and Obsolete Sport Coat.

They have sworn to snub him when they meet him. They refuse to eat at the same table with him. They bar him from their sets—and they decline to give him any tips on the horses . . . when he has the coat on.

Taylor only laughs. He cannot wear any of the sport coats he brought back from the London shops because he hasn't any of them.

He gave them all away to friends as presents.

In Hollywood With Hedda Hopper

HEDDA HOPPER.

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 20.—So you want to be a motion picture star! I wonder how many of you realize how much work that entails. Here's a sample day:

You slide out of bed onto the floor at 6 or 6:30 a. m. where you do 15 minutes' limbering-up exercises; they'll help get your eyes open. A cold shower, a shampoo and finger wave. Most girls have one a day. The blondes from necessity because they use gold dust in their hair; the brunettes to make their hair shiny. Some of the latter use half a dozen eggs.

While you're under the dryer, you take the juice of a lemon and a cup of hot water. Then you look over the script for the day's work. Following that you have a glass of orange juice and a cup of black coffee. After giving instructions to the cook and the servants, and governess—if you have children—you're ready for the studio, where make-up is applied and curls combed out.

If you're wearing an evening gown, you're whitened to the waist, and it's cold and sticky. You're poured into your gown and a car whisks you onto the stage. You're greeted by the director, the crew and the cast.

You have to set the mood for the day. Everyone takes the cue from the star. You're not permitted to have a headache, heartache or bellyache. Then your work begins. You know your lines, but some members of the cast don't. You rehearse and keep at it until they do. The lights are set, sound adjusted, the camera starts.

The first scene is in the bag. The director doesn't like it. You begin polishing until it's a precious jewel. Then perhaps your leading man will forget his lines, which immediately telegraphs itself to your brain: "Oh, golly, I hope it won't happen to me," but if they keep on stumbling, the fear is bound to get you. Why, I've known the same scene to be done 40 times. And when it's finished you're ready to scream, and you sometimes do, which is telegraphed to all points of the globe, and you're headlined as a temperamental so-and-so.

At 12 o'clock lunch is called but can you have sausages and scrambled eggs or a nice bit of steak that you can get your teeth into? No. Why, most of them have forgotten what a piece of chocolate cake tastes like. A cup of hot soup, green salad with a little cottage cheese and a cup of black coffee is as much as you can stand, because your dress is so tight if you ate any more, it would show. Just try to relax after that bit of bunny food.

Publicity men are there arranging interviews for the papers, magazines, special photographs. Would you mind if they brought the Governor on the set? The Senatorial investigators are making the rounds of the studios. Would you be kind enough to be photographed with them?

• • • •

Members of your family, who never did a lick of work in their lives, are on the long-distance telephone telling you their allowance will have to be increased—that baby Peggy has to have braces on her teeth, or they need a new automobile, or they should go for the rest of the winter to Florida.

• • • •

Then you rush back to the set. And if you happen to have a crying scene, it won't be so difficult for you after your conversation with your family. Just as you come out of it, you look up for your director's approval, but catch the eye of an extra instead, and as plainly as though written in words across her forehead, she's saying: "Gee, you were rotten in that—I'd like to show you how to do it." And just then when your nose, eyes and mascara are all running at the same time, the head of the company walks on with a big New York banker.

U. S. Scene Is Shown Popular At Box Office

Pointing the way was Cecil B. De Mille's "The Plainsman," one of the most successful pictures of last year, which De Mille promptly followed with "The Buccaneer," which is now topping "The Plainsman" grosses. It is not the first time De Mille has proved the worth of an American theme as public fare, having started 25 years ago with "The Squaw Man," "The Virginian," "The Girl of the Golden West," and made "The Little American" with Mary Pickford at the request of the Government during the World War. And he intends to continue extolling American patriotism if he can find a subject greater than his now projected "Hudson's Bay Vompany."

Of the same mind, in championing the American scene, is Lucien Hubbard, whose production of "The Texans," an epic of the Old West, is one of the more ambitious offerings on the Paramount schedule for this year. Lives of a Texas Ranger," with probably the same cast that made "Texas Rangers" one of the key triumphs of two years ago, and "Gettysburg," the long awaited version of McKinley Kantor's novel, are other American sagas this studio has on the way.

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: MONDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1938 15

This Morning..

By Walter Haight.

Between you and me and the half-mile pole, a Washington-owned horse has a swell chance of hitting the jackpot in the $100,000 added Santa Anita Handicap, to be contested at the California track a week from the coming Saturday.

HAIGHT.

Now I wouldn't recommend that you pawn the family jewels, obtain a loan on the family car, mortgage your house or cash in your insurance policies; and far be it from me to suggest that President Roosevelt bet a few billion and try to balance the budget, but I will say that if you have a ball of silver paper or a stack of cigarette coupons lying idle in your bureau draw you might do worse than wager that a little horse named Aneroid will be first to place a pair of quivering nostrils on the wire.

I must be careful. I don't want to put "conjuns" on Aneroid. The truth is that my sidekick, Bill Bennings, and I have stopped so many horses in recent years that auto mechanics now are relining brakes with The Post sports pages. It's a little difficult at first, but I'm going to type the remainder of this piece with my fingers crossed.

Out Chevy Chase Circle way this afternoon there's going to be a meeting of the "Washington mob" that the New York papers said "murdered the country" with its bets on Aneroid one day last summer. The ringleaders, John A. Manfuso, local manufacturing chemist, and his wife, Zelma, will line up the smaller members of the "gang" and kiss them goodbye before departing to be eyewitnesses to the bid of their horse. The chief concern of the five little Manfusos then will be the positions they will occupy around the radio when Aneroid runs.

* * * *

It is rather generally known that Manfuso bought Aneroid for $300 at a Virginia auction of John Hay Whitney horses; that Dion Kerr, Washington trainer, groomed the colt for racing, and that Aneroid became a stake horse much to the disgust of some wealthy horse people who frowned on Aneroid at the sale.

It was the fine breeding of Aneroid, by The Porter out of Outburst, that lured Manfuso to the colt. However, Aneroid showed no indication of future greatness as a 2-year-old. He won a pair of modest overnight purses and was second twice in 11 starts, earning $2,695. At that, it was a good showing for a $300 horse.

Aneroid began to command respect in 1936, his third year. The handicappers put him in the Blackstone Valley Handicap with 106 pounds. Opposed to him were Sation, Appealing, Fraidy Cat, Preeminent, Cycle, Beefsteak, Liberal and other crack sprinters. Some of the best race track eyes almost popped out of their sockets at Narragansett that afternoon when Aneroid led the gang home, running the 6 furlongs in 1:11 1-5 and winning his first stake.

Aneroid did not win another stake as a 3-year-old, but finished second to Jay Jay in the Susquehanna Handicap at Havre de Grace. However, in Aneroid's wake were Whereaway and Roman Soldier.

Now we are getting down to the point where I'm going to show you that Aneroid was not shipped to California for the train ride. Many of you will remember his first 1937 race at Bowie. He gave away cartloads of weight and came from behind to whip Sunned and others at 6 furlongs.

Then he moved to Havre de Grace and tied Jay Jay, Whopper and others in knots in the $5,000 Harford Handicap. At Pimlico, still sprinting, Aneroid won the Baltimore Spring Handicap in a gallop with the formidable Wise Prince and Clingendeal behind him.

* * * *

In the Dixie Handicap, also at Pimlico, Aneroid was pitted against Calumet Dick, Finance and others at a mile and three-sixteenths. Horsemen said that Manfuso and his trainer must be insane to send a sprinter over the gruelling route. "They are killing off o great sprinter," said the press box boys. Well, Aneroid probably would have won had not Calumet Dick swerved into him in the stretch. As it was, Aneroid was third.

And so Aneroid went to the New York tracks, labelled as a sprinter. Then he began to give them the works. In the historic Suburban Handicap at Belmont, Aneroid went to the front of Memory Book, Esposa, Snark and others. While the crowd fairly chanted, "He'll quit," Aneroid ripped off 6 furlongs in 1:11 1-5 and, seemingly without effort, went the mile in a breathless 1:35 4-5, and he not only won the mile and a quarter race, but was clocked in 2:01 3-5—and was not extended! Some say it is the fastest time ever recorded for the route. Whisk Broom was credited with 2 minutes flat, but horsemen say it is a myth.

Three weeks later Aneroid went back to sprinting in the Carter Handicap and proved he could carry weight. With 123 pounds in his saddle, he won in 1:23 3-5, just three-fifths over the track record.

Here's the race that brought Aneroid's ticket to California. He met Seabiscuit in the Brooklyn Handicap next out. Each had 122 pounds up. It was a two-horse race, Rosemount and the others never being factors. Seabiscuit outran Aneroid for a while, but the Virginia-bred colt moved up on him and New York will never forget the ding-dong battle they fought through the stretch. The judges consulted the photo—it was Seabiscuit by an inch!

Aneroid came out of that race with a "dinky foot." He was not himself during the fall, despite a long rest. However, on the final day of the Pimlico meeting, Aneroid caught Seabiscuit at the far turn and the two ran head-and-head to midstretch, where Aneroid dropped back gradually.

After the race Charlie Kurtsinger, who rode him, said to me, "You know, if War Admiral doesn't run this winter, I'll be mighty interested in riding Aneroid in the Santa Anita Handicap."

Seabiscuit gives Aneroid ten pounds in the big race. If Aneroid is in the shape he was that day in New York—well, draw your own conclusion.

N. Y. Owner Asserts Ace Not for Sale

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Philadelphia, Feb. 20.—In a surprising statement made at the National Professional Football League meeting here today, Tim Mara, owner of the New York Giants, definitely quashed rumors that Tuffy Leemans will wear a Washington Redskin uniform next season.

Denying reports that the Redskins had refused to pay a "ridiculous" price of $25,000 for the former George Washington University star, Mara bluntly said:

"Tuffy Leemans is not for sale at any price and therefore no deal of any sort will be considered."

This decision ended talk that George Marshall, Redskin owner, would obtain Leemans to replace Cliff Battles, who quit pro football to accept a coaching position at Columbia University.

Redskins Make Deal.

Earlier the Giants and the Redskins figured in the first player trade of the meeting when Washington sent Nello Falaschi, former Santa Clara All-American back, to the Giants in return for George Karamatic, Gonzaga University halfback.

Karamatic, a 5-foot-9, 187-pound triple-threater, who was described by Tiny Thornhill, Stanford coach, as the "best back on the Pacific Coast," will not be graduated until June but was already on the Giants' draft list.

Although Falaschi, a star in 1934-5-6 with the Broncs, is a capable performer, the Redskins appear to have an edge in the player-for-player swap. Karamatic may be the man that Marshall seeks to replace the fleet Battles. In a game last year Karmatic scored two touchdowns in three minutes, a feat not ecclipsed all season.

Star of Long Runs.

He first intercepted an enemy pass to run 87 yards to tally and then took the succeeding kickoff to cross the goal line again on a 95-yard jaunt. He was mentioned on several All-America squads.

In one of the most important business moves of the dull meeting to date, the league voted to abolish the temporary suspension system and to increase from 25 to 30 the number of players a club may carry on its active playing list.

Officials said this step was taken to eliminate difficulties arising over the suspension plan, under which a player could be suspended for two weeks and then be reinstated.

Under the new plan, they said, once a player is suspended for any cause he must remain out for the remainder of the season and must make application before he can be reinstated thereafter.

It was also voted to have six "teams of officials" to work the entire season, rather than individual officials. Three teams will be selected by East coaches and three by West coaches. The league will pay their salaries.

Schedule Incomplete.

Other than these two moves, league business was again at a virtual standstill. Schedule makers continued to be met with opposition as teams fought to have their major games booked at home.

The Redskins will entertain the Brooklyn Dodgers on September 18 in Griffith stadium, in the local opener, after inaugurating the season the week previous in Philadelphia, against the Quaker City Eagles.

The Marshall forces are angling for a game in Washington with the Chicago Bears, as their Western opponent, as New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh also will appear here on the five-game local card. The champions played six home games last year, and under a league ruling are slated to play only five home games this year.

Vic Ronchetti Scores Skate 'Grand Slam'

By the Associated Press.

Oconomowoc, Wis., Feb. 20.—Vic Ronchetti, slender young Chicagoan who learned his ice skating on park lagoons, was crowned today as the first "grand slam" champion in the 48 years of National Amateur Skating Union competition.

The 21-year-old Ronchetti won the national skating title today, a week after he captured the North American title at Saranac Lake, N. Y., to become the union's first double winner in its major competition in one year.

Ronchetti had to come from behind to capture the final and deciding race of the day, the 5-mile grind, to gain the championship. The victory gave him 130 points for the two days of competition on the almost perfect ice of Fowler Lake. Bob Heckenbach, also of Chicago, finished in second place with 110 points.

Ronchetti took the title by winning the 1-mile, 440-yard and 5-mile races and placing second in the 880-yard and 2-mile events.

Pretty Mary Dolan, of Minneapolis, won the national women's crown by capturing four of five races. She finished 20 points in front of Eleanor Thiel Dyer, Chicago housewife, after winning the mile race, feature women's event, today. Mrs. Dyer was second in that event. Previously she had trailed Miss Dolan to the tape in three races, the 220 and the 880 yard and three-quarter mile events.

In the Great Lakes skating tournament, run in connection with the national meet, Lowell Miller, of Chicago, took the intermediate boys title and Loraine (Bunny) Lawler, of Chicago, won the junior girls championship after shattering two meet records. She won the North American indoor and outdoor championships last year.

The junior boys Great Lakes championship was won by Sidney Wienstein, of Minneapolis. Roger Mosiman, Minneapolis, won the juvenile boys title and Aubrey Nass, Minneapolis, took the juvenile girls crown. Buddy Solem, Chicago, won the midget boys championship, and Peter Dube, Escanaba, Mich., was crowned old-timers titleholder. The club championship went to the Chicago youth organization.

Bethesdans Face Battles

Play St. John's Tuesday, Georgetown Friday.

Perched firmly on top of the Montgomery County's unofficial standings, Bethesda-Chevy Chase courtmen will meet a pair of Prep School League teams in the feature contests this week, entertaining the city-champion St. John's team Tuesday night and Georgetown Prep on Friday.

Undefeated in three contests, Bethesda's basketeers are undoubtedly the best team in the county, but the runner-up berth finds Blair High and Gaithersburg deadlocked with four victories and two defeats each, although Blair's defeats have been at the hands of the league leaders, while Gaithersburg's losses have been at the hands of the up-county teams.

Damascus plays twice this week, entertaining Ellicott City on Tuesday and trekking to Charlotte Hall on Friday. Gaithersburg travels to Frederick tomorrow and plays host to Poolesville on Friday in the only intracounty clash listed for the week. In the seventh game Blair High will entertain the Mount Rainier courtmen Saturday night in Silver Spring, and attempt to repeat a previous victory.

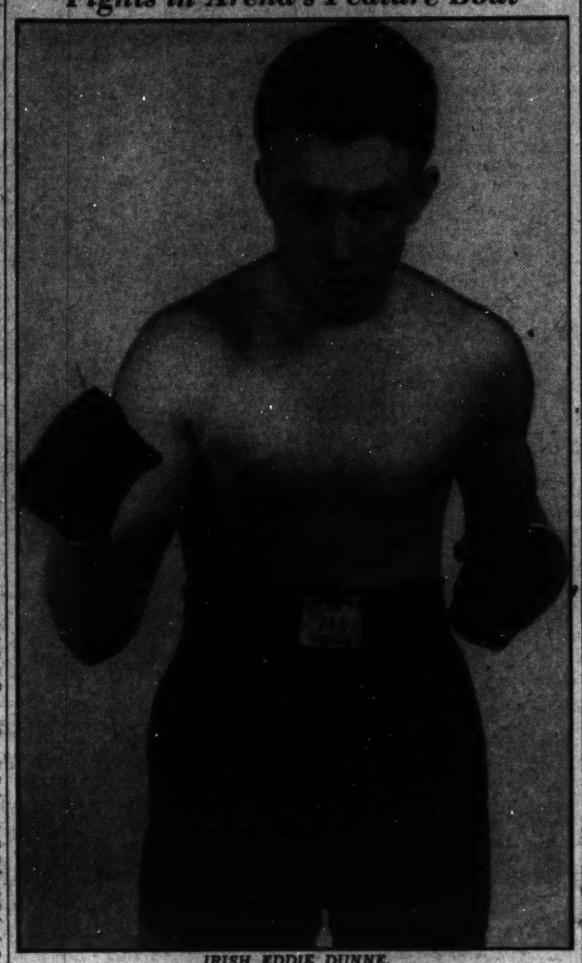
Fights in Arena's Feature Bout



IRISH EDDIE DUNNE.

Gevinson and Dunne Top Arena Ring Card

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Still regarded as the most promising ringman ever developed here, Lou Gevinson puts his featherweight titular aspirations behind him tonight and launches his quest for the world lightweight crown in a bout with Irish Eddie Dunne at the Arena. The argument will be over a ten-round route.

Victor over Armada Sicilia in his last fight, and looking as sound as a Government bond, Gevinson is expected to enter the ring a 6-5 favorite. Some of his more enthusiastic supporters are willing to wager even money he flattens the New York Celt, and betting is brisk.

The local larruper happens to be a legitimate lightweight, although he never had much difficulty making the featherweight limit. But freed of the weight problem, able to eat and drink normally while training, Gevinson looks like a different fighter, a real championship prospect. He should come in at 134 pounds, while Dunne will probably scale 135 pounds.

It will be another of the ring's age-old struggles of boxer vs. slugger, with Dunne expected to supply most of the boxing. Gevinson carries dynamite in either glove, and will flatten his man if he gets a clean shot at him. Getting that shot, however, promises to be a genuine problem for the Treasury clerk, inasmuch as his opponent is rated as one of the cleverest ring generals in his division.

Dunne is not equipped with a kayo punch. At least, he failed to show one in four previous engagements here, and there is scant reason to believe he developed one in the last couple of months. He punches fairly hard, hard enough to rock Gevinson, and can cut his face to shreds if his left is working normally. His supporters are confident he'll box the ears off Gevinson and accumulate enough points to win a couple of decisions.

And while the actual fighting is being committed in the ring a battle of wits will be raging in the corners. Benny Leonard, former lightweight champion of the world and Dunne's manager, will be in his boy's corner, and on the opposite side of the battle pit will repose Lew Tendler, a great lightweight in his day and one of Leonard's most persistent challengers.

Tendler has been imported for the fray because he happens to be a southpaw, and figures to give Gevinson a few valuable pointers on ways and means of whipping a smart orthodox puncher. Advice will be relatively unimportant tonight, however, because after that bell clangs the boys are strictly on their own.

The supporting card includes a six-round semifinal between Steve Mamakos, Gevinson's welterweight stable-mate, and Frankie Velez, and three four-round bouts. Johnny Miller and Alexander Franklin, colored welterweights; Billy Temes and John Gilley, featherweights; and El Brookman and Tommy Hoover, welterweights, complete the card. The last bout is a substitute for one between Mike Morton and Lew Transparetti which was canceled.

Arch McDonald will interview Benny Leonard, Irish Eddie Dunne's manager, and Lew Tendler, Lew Gevinson's second, on his program at 6:15 o'clock tonight.

W. Va. Five Defeated by Local Pros

By Jack Munhall.

A blustering band of professional football stars, illy disguised in basketball pants, roared into town yesterday to indulge in a bit of premature grid practice at the expense of unwilling but helpless Heurich Brewers five. The blatant, battering invaders, sometimes referred to as the West Virginia Collegians five, spent the afternoon experimenting tackles and flying blocks on our only pro cage team.

Might again bowed to right, however, and when the bruised and battered Brewers' bodies had been swept up and deposited in a neat pile, it was found that Heurich had won the game, 51-39.

And the hard-fought victory was achieved to the unqualified approval of some 500 spectators who caused a wrestling atmosphere to pervade the usually peaceful setting.

Call for Rough Tactics.

Choice rassle rants as "kill de bum" and "break his beak" were directed at such playful behomoths as Joe Stydahar, Chicago Bears' 225-pound tackle; Babe Barna, who also plays football for a living, and Hermie Schmarr, a mere 215-pound stripling who is remembered as a C. U. athlete.

These rough, tough and awfully nasty lads apparently had not heard the decision of the National Professional Football League which banned post-season grid games for they were not pulling punches.

The Collegians were not as good basketball performers as they were reported to be and the game for one thing dispelled much of the fame that has accrued to Schmarr and Stydahar.

Stydahar, who led the Eastern Intercollegiate League in scoring when he graced the line-up of West Virginia in 1935, and Schmarr, who led the District scorers for two consecutive years, couldn't have hit the basket with a fire hose.

Otis Zahn, Heurich's stellar guard, covered Schmarr like a collapsed circus tent and the former Card was lucky to get his 4 points. Stydahar, shoving little Milt Schoenfeld around like a lawn mower, managed to dump in 10 points to show for his half-hundred attempted heaves.

Colebank Shows Class.

The Collegians, however, paced by Albie Colebank, a real classy forward, offered real opposition in the last period to cut Heurich's advantage to 40-37 before Whitey Wilson and Schoenfeld turned off the heat.

Heurich scored almost at will to hold a 17-9 margin at the end of the first period and 32 to 24 going into the final session. They loafed most of the way, being extended only in the last five minutes.

Colebank proved the outstanding player on the floor, ramming in seven field goals, to take point honors. Ralph Bennie, still deadly on set shots from any angle, and Wilson chipped in with 11 apiece for Heurich. Schoenfeld and Ben Goldfaden obtained eight each.

In a preliminary basketball game, District of Columbia Fire Department overcame a 15-12 half-time deficit to whip Treasury, 31 to 25.

By the United Press.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Feb. 20.—Sixto Escobar regained the bantamweight championship of the world tonight when he outpointed Harry Jeffra, of Baltimore, in their 15-round title fight before a crowd of 12,800 in Escambria Park.

The swarthy little island man battled the Baltimore lad off his feet from the third round on to regain the crown Jeffra won from him last September in the carnival of champions at New York's Yankee Stadium.

Immediately after the fight, Jeffra's manager, Heinie Blaustein said Harry was through with the bantamweight ranks.

"It is getting too hard for Harry to pare down to the 118-pound limit," he said. "I am going to build him back up and we'll begin campaigning in the featherweight (126-pound) class."

The referee scored nine rounds for Escobar, three for Jeffra and three even. It was a unanimous decision.

Despite the perfect weather, the crowd only two-thirds filled the baseball park. Gov. Blanton Winship headed the list of attending celebrities.

Both Under Limit.

Although the bout was scheduled for 10 p. m. (9 p. m. Eastern standard time) it was 18 minutes later before the little men began pegging leather. At first it looked like Jaffra was going to give Escobar another such boxing lesson as he did last fall. The Oriole City lad danced about his opponent, spearing out lightning jabs to take the first round.

Although inflicting little damage, Escobar had an edge in the second, reaching Jeffra with two good rights to the head. Connecting with lefts and rights that reddened Harry's face, the Puerto Rican also took the third. Jeffra had trouble spearing Sixto in the fourth, but kept jabbing away to hold his opponent even in this session.

Slows Jeffra Down.

Escobar took the next three rounds, piling into Jeffra with all the power he could summon. A stiff right in the fifth slowed Harry down and afterward he remained more cautious. A vicious left hook to the jaw gave Sixto the edge in the sixth.

The crowd got to its feet with a roar in the seventh when Escobar began to drive the American around the ring with rights and lefts. Both were bleeding from cuts over the eyes. The fast action continued through the eighth with honors even, but in the ninth Sixto pegged across a hard right that split Jeffra's left brow. Escobar also won the tenth, chasing Harry about the ring in an effort to deliver a knockout punch.

Jeffra Floored Twice.

Escobar floored him twice with hard rights to the jaw in the eleventh. Harry, however, got up gamely each time and fought back, but his blows carried little or no sting. The crowd went wild as Escobar battered the titleholder, who took a nine count on each trip to the canvas.

In the twelfth Harry came up glassy-eyed, and all he could do was attempt to cover up from the onrushing Escobar. He recovered somewhat in the thirteenth and a wild punch cut Sixto's eye. Escobar floored his man again in the following round, a hard left to the kidney spinning Harry around to the canvas for another nine count. The fifteenth also went to Escobar, who followed his man relentlessly, battering him into the ropes twice.

The fight was nearly called off this afternoon because of the argument over ring officials. Johnny McAvoy, of New York, had been named as referee, and Nat Fleisher, editor of Ring Magazine, had been picked as judge. Jeffra wanted Ned Brown, of New York, for the other judge, but Escobar's manager, Lou Brix, refused to accept him. The island sports commission also insisted on a local man.

Thompson Named Judge.

A compromise finally reached when Jeffra agreed to accept Edgar K. Thompson, an agent in the Federal Bureau of Investigation's office here. Although Thompson had never officiated at a fight previously, he has followed the ring sport for many years. Sixto charged that after he had lost to Jeffra last fall Brown had said "Harry is going to knock you out the next time you fight him."

This was the fourth time the scrapping bantams had met and the first time Escobar had come out on top. The first two decisions Sixto dropped were nontitle affairs.

Spring Grid Practice Set for Terps Today

Coach Frank Dobson Calls Workout to Look Over Replacements for Regulars to Be Graduated in June; Expects 35 Candidates.

Coach Frank Dobson, in quest of nine replacements for his graduation-depleted University of Maryland grid team, will hold spring football practice this afternoon.

Dobson loses a center, two guards, a tackle, three ends, a blocking back and a running back via the June graduation route. During the coming six weeks he will attempt to uncover either regular or strong reserves to fill the gaps.

Under the old line tutors plan, only products of last season's frosh pigskin eleven are allowed to take part in spring training sessions. Dobson expects approximately 35 candidates to report for tomorrow's initial meeting.

The first two weeks will be devoted to schooling in basic gridiron fundamentals. The remaining four will be occupied by intensive scrimmages and outdoor signal drills. The squad will be divided into teams, according to Dobson, which will work against each other.

Dobson says his biggest problems is to find two guards to take the places of Mike Surgent and Willie Wolfe, according to the Associated Press. He classifies these two Terp forward defensemen as "two of the best guards I have ever seen in collegiate football." Both Wolfe and Surgent will be graduated in June.

Dobson is particularly interested as to how Joe Murphy, termed the best running back to hit college since Bill Guckeyson, will make out. The fleet-footed Murphy was responsible for more than half of the freshman points last season.

Lou Ambers Meets Jallos

Bout Tops Card Tonight at Richmond.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 20 (AP).—Lou Ambers, lightweight champion of the world, arrived here this morning and worked out at the Y. M. C. A. before a large crowd for his nontitle bout tomorrow night with Lou Jallos, Cleveland lightweight.

The Ambers-Jallos bout tops a card of 10 rounds consisting of an 8-round semifinal bout matching Red Lewis, Richmond light heavyweight, and Leo Meyers, Durham, N. C., fighter; a 6-rounder brings together Sanford Carrier, Washington, D. C., scrapper, and Bobby Wilson, of Tampa, Fla., middleweights, and Hunter Crostic, Richmond middleweight, will meet Chief "Wahoo" Wilson, Cherokee Indian, from the North Carolina reservation, in the other 6-rounder.

Jallos, arriving yesterday, had previously worked out and seemed to be in good shape for his big chance against the Herkimer Hurricane.

Adamick Seeking Fight With Brown In Detroit March 4

Young Jimmy, wearing dark glasses to cover up the marks of his scrap with Harry Thomas, Chicago and Eagle Bend, Minn., veteran in New York Friday night, was anxious to sign for a fight with Natie Brown, of Washington, D. C., here March 4.

Promoters had announced before the Adamick-Thomas bout, which Jimmy won on a decision, that the Michigan youngster would be matched to meet the winner of the recent Brown-Lorenzo Pack go. Brown knocked out the Detroit Negro in 10 rounds.

"I can see well enough to sign a contract to fight Natie Brown," Jimmy grinned from behind his glasses. His right eye, more or less a concentration point for Thomas' fists, was black.

Cards Still Hope to Sign Baugh

Winter Haven, Fla., Feb. 20 (AP). Branch Rickey, vice president of the St. Louis Cardinals Baseball Club, said tonight efforts to sign Sammy Baugh, the professional football ace, had been unsuccessful.

He admitted Baugh had made known the salary he would expect, but inferred the figure was too high.

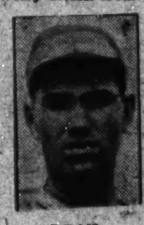
Baugh "either likes coaching football better or is just not interested," Rickey added.

The club executive said he had been unable to arrange a conference with Baugh here, but would continue efforts to sign "Slinging Sam."

Dizzy Dean Offers $1,000 to Robber For Lost Jewelry

By the Associated Press.

Bradenton, Fla., Feb. 20.—Jerome Herman Dean said today he would pay $1,000 reward for the return of jewelry stolen from his home last night.



DEAN.

Estimating the value of the gems at $4,000, the St. Louis Cardinal pitcher said the offer was open to anyone, including the thief.

"If the person who stole that jewelry will return it," said Dean, "I will pay the money with no questions asked and I won't have the guilty party arrested."

Dizzy said the stolen jewels had more sentimental than monetary value. He listed them as two diamond bracelets and a diamond ring he had given Mrs. Dean, a diamond tie pin, a gold wrist watch and a cigarettee lighter.

The watch, Dean said, was given to him by Hartford, Conn., baseball fans and he valued it highly.

Chambers Quintet Wins 3d Straight

The recently organized Chambers Undertakers basketball team easily won its third straight victory yesterday, defeating the strong Delaware & Hudson team, 34-14, before a large crowd in Hyattsville Armory.

Despite the fact that it played without the services of Pete Jackson, center, and Warren Kidwell, forward, its two leading scorers, Chambers had little trouble with Delaware, which boasts triumphs over such fives as F. B. I. and Senate Beer. It led, 14-10, at half, after overcoming a 6-0 deficit.

Mike O'Malley, sharpshooting guard, led the winners' attack with five baskets and a free throw, while Don Fones and B. Cogar tallied 5 each for the losers.

Harry Cooper Holds Two-Stroke Lead in $5,000 Crescent City Open

Byrd Shoots 67 to Equal Course Mark

Ex-Yankee Trails by 6 Strokes; McSpaden Second.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, La. Feb. 20.—Little Harry Cooper rolled along in front of the Crescent City Open golf tournament today but a sun scorched baseball player who used to understudy Babe Ruth had the gallery stampeding at his heels.

Quiet, hard-working Sam Byrd, the bulky gent who rode the New York Yankee bench for years while waiting for the Bambino to retire, methodically took City Park's par 72 to pieces with a record-equaling round of 67.

On top of an opening-round 80 Byrd piled this 5 under par performance, putting him back into the scrap for the $5,000 prize money although still six shots behind Cooper, the Chicopee, Mass., robot.

Cooper started out as if to make it a one-man show, gathering in a 2 under par 35 on the first nine, but a failing putter and the surging of a tremendous gallery hampered him on the back nine and he finished with a 73 and a 141 total. He had a 68 yesterday in rough weather.

McSpaden Second.

Two shots behind him was Harold (Jug) McSpaden, Winchester, Mass., professional, who fashioned two nines of 36 for a 72 and his 143 total. Still in the running at 145 were Dick Metz, bronzed Chicagoan, and Vic Ghezzi, the Deal, N. J., swinger. Metz tacked a 72 onto his yesterday's 73, while Ghezzi duplicated the trick.

COOPER.

BYRD.

Four strokes under his opening round was Sam Snead, of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., alone at 146. Snead, 1 under par on the first 9, picked up 2 birdies on the closing holes to offset a pair of bogies and finished with a 71, 1 under par.

Byrd was 7 under par through his first 8 holes, getting birdies at the first, third, sixth, seventh, and eighth holes and an eagle 3 at the 480-yard second hole. He needed a par 4 at the 45-yard par 4 ninth for a 30—7 under. His teeshot split the middle, but his iron second bounded over the green and into a wagon rut.

Byrd Bags 2 Birdies.

He chose to pitch the shot out of deep mud, fell short of the green and finally missed a 3-foot putt and bagged a 6 for an outgoing 32. He was par 35 coming home, getting 2 birdies that erased 2 bogies.

Together at 147 were Jack Grout, of Hershey, Pa., and Byrd. At 148 stood Denny Shute, the P. G. A. champion of Miami, Fla.; Henry Ransom, of Bryan, Tex., and Willie Goggin, of San Francisco. The 149 group included Horace Lacey, of Little Rock, Ark.; Pat Sawyer, of Birmingham, Mich.; Frank Walsh, of Miami, Fla.; Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y.; John Revolta, of Evanston, Ill., leading money winner, and Bud Williamson, of Fort Wayne, Ind.

Two Louisianians, Johnny Camet, of New Orleans, and John Cole, of Baton Rouge, were at the 150 mark, while Abe Espinosa, of Chicago; Leo Mallory, of Weeburn, Conn.; Joe Burch, of Mobile, Ala.; Jimmy Hines, of Garden City, N. J.; Chandler Harper, of Portsmouth, Va., and Horton Smith, of Oak Park, Ill., were ten shots behind the leader at 151.

Almost out of the contest at 152 were three big names, Lawson Little, Jimmy Thomson, and Ky Laffoon, while blasted out altogether far back at 156 were Byron Nelson and Jim Demaret, the recent winner of the San Francisco match play event.

Jack Pollard May Not Ride In Handicap

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Feb. 20.—Seabiscuit, barring added hard luck, will race in the $100,000 Santa Anita handicap, but his regular rider, Jockey Jack "Red" Pollard, may watch his pride and joy run from a box in the grandstand.

Owner Charles S. Howard, fearful that Pollard would be unable to take the mighty Seabiscuit into the big race March 5 because of a broken collar bone received in a spill yesterday, declared:

"Seabiscuit will run if I have to ride him myself."

Far from disheartened from the bad break that robbed him of his ace rider, Howard added, smiling, "Of course, that might put a little too much weight on Seabiscuit."

The San Francisco turfman said negotiations would be opened for another jockey as soon as he learned definitely that Pollard would be unable to get back in the saddle.

Pollard rode the 'Biscuit in the 1937 Santa Anita Handicap and all his other races. Howard refused to let another jockey climb aboard his horse when Pollard was suspended up North last fall.

Similar worries faced the Foxcatcher Farms. Jockey Maurice Peters sprained an ankle when his mount, Mandingham, and Pollard's horse, Fair Knightess, fell and may not be able to ride Dauber for his stable in the $50,000 derby Tuesday.

Peters already had a sprained wrist, received last week when Dauber reared and unseated him at the post in a derby trial race.

A feature of the playground meet will be relay races in the 85, 100 and 115-pound classes for the privilege of competing in the evening for special medals, which will be awarded by Griffith. Three teams in each class will be selected.

Although the events for the youngsters' carnival have not been fully decided upon, it has been announced that dashes, relays and high jumps in all classes will definitely be a part of the program. The boys will compete in weight groups of 70, 85, 100, 115 pounds and unlimited.

Conference Teams Enter Final Week of Competition.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 20.—Southern Conference basketball teams faced the final week of the season today with nine teams left in the race for eight berths in the annual championship tournament.

Only three of these teams—North Carolina, North Carolina State and the Citadel—felt certain of bids to the colorful post season event at Raleigh on March 3-5. Contests this week will eliminate one of the following squads from the field: Clemson, Duke, Richmond, Maryland, Washington and Lee, and Wake Forest.

Clemson, fourth in the standing today with seven wins in 11 games, was reasonably sure of a chance to compete for the title but has yet to play Davidson and the Citadel. Duke's Blue Devils have won seven in 12 but must meet North Carolina and Wake Forest.

Richmond's record shows six wins and four losses with W. and L. and William and Mary on this week's card. The conference season has ended for Maryland with a six and four record.

Washington and Lee's defending champions have been successful in five of nine tilts and in addition to Richmond the Generals will engage W. and M. and Furman. The loop has no ruling whereby the crown-wearing quint automatically gets an invitation to the tournament so the Generals must take their chances before the Conference basketball committee along with the other aspirants.

Wake Forest, listed ninth in the standing with six triumphs against seven losses, have the toughest assignment. The Deacons meet Duke this week and will close their season against Davidson a week from tomorrow. Wake Forest has played a difficult Conference schedule and turned in the only victory over Carolina's White Phantoms.

The tournament committee, which meets at Lynchburg a week from today, will base its selections on standings in the Conference and caliber of opposition faced.

LaSalle Cagers Down Allegany

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 20.—LaSalle Institute cagers assured themselves of at least a tie in the final standing of the intra-city championship series by defeating the Allegany High quint 23-16 on the Campobello court before 700 fans.

It was LaSalle's third straight victory of the intra-city battle for the Chamber of Commerce championship trophy and gave the Catholic cagers a sweep of the series with the Blue and White crew. The setback eliminated Allegany from the race.

It's a Jewish Boxer and Irish Manager in the Ring Tonight

It's the Other Way 'Round in the Other Corner, When Gevinson and Irish Eddie Dunne Oppose.

It's an old axiom in boxing that a good Jewish fighter needs a good Irish manager to go places, and that a good Irish fighter will be a total loss without a capable Jewish gentleman in his corner. If it rings true tonight the bout between Lou Gevinson and Irish Eddie Dunne is bound to be a draw.

A model Jewish boy, a good scrapper and a great drawing card, locally, Gevinson is piloted by Matt Twomey, a curley-haired chap as Irish as Paddy's pig. Twomey is a fighting name in the Gaelic language, and if that isn't enough, his mother was a Donovan. The Donovans, b'gorry, are a two-fisted family.

Dunne, a clever boxer (and they say he's found a punch to go with it), is under the wing of Benny Leonard, who happens to be as Jewish as Twomey is Irish. Benny, during his reign as lightweight champion of the world, was managed by Billy Gibson, and Billy was, yeah, you guessed it, an Irishman. That's the way it goes. If the fighter has a six-pointed star on his trunks, it's a 10-1 bet his manager answers to the name of Michael Murphy, or a similar Emeral nameplate, and vice versa.

Ring history is replete with similar successful combinations or partnerships, the best known, perhaps, being that between Jewish Joe Gould, who would have given his life's blood for his Irish heavyweight champion, Jim Braddock. This was one of the best known and will be long remembered, but there have been other famous teams that held a high place in the game.

A partial list would include Gig Rooney, who managed Jackie Fields, a welterweight. Lew Diamond did the business for Johnny Buff. Al Lippe piloted Jeff Smith and "Dumb Dan" Morgan directed Kingfish Levinskey's affairs in the earlier stages of his career. Joe Jacobs had Mike McTigue, whose title-winning argument with Battling Siki in Dublin on St. Patrick's Day aroused no little comment.

Jimmy Johnston is more English than Irish, but he qualifies on a hair-line decision with Ted Kid Lewis, a welterweight. Billy McCarney, the Old Roman, was Nate Brown's manager for years, and when the District heavy switched managers he came under the wing of another Irishman, Jim McNamara. Ralph Gold is arranging Eddie Hogan's schedule and doing all right.

The one all-Jewish combination that seems to be doing all right is Sid Fishel and George Abrams, but the odds are 2-1 that if George ever leaves these precincts he'll turn up in a foreign ring as Pat O'Hanlon, or Fishel will bill himself as Tom O'Dowd.

Pet Monkey Halts Katy's Record Try

Coral Gables, Fla., Feb. 20 (AP). A pet monkey has halted, for the time being at least, Katherine Rawls' streak of record-breaking swimming performances.

The Fort Lauderdale, Fla., aquatic star was bitten on the hand by the monkey and her physician advised her not to risk infection by swimming today in what was to have been an attempt to break a seventh national women's swimming record in as many weeks.

A few months ago the monkey bit Miss Rawls' younger sister, Helen, also a star swimmer, but the effects were not serious.

On Washington's birthday, February 22, the Washington Fencers Club will hold an open dueling sword team competition between teams of three men each representing fencing groups in the District of Columbia, Annapolis and Baltimore, at Maryland University at 2 p. m.

Clovis Deladrier, fencing coach at the United States Naval Academy and Maitre d'Armes of the Washington Fencers Club, has offered three silver cups and three medals to be presented to the winning team and the second best teams, respectively. These prizes become the permanent possessions of the winners.

Among the competitors will be officers of the United States Army and Navy and teams including the most skillful fencers of the Washington Fencers Club, the Musketeers of the Washington Y. M. C. A., universities of the District of Columbia and the vicinity, and the various groups comprising the Fencing League of Maryland. The public is invited.

D. C. Board Reinstates Vittorio Venturi

The District of Columbia Boxing Association yesterday conditionally reinstated Vittorio Venturi, high ranking welterweight contender. Venturi was set down under an indefinite suspension after he violated a boxing contract with the Rialto Theater last January.

Chicago, Feb. 20 (AP).—The 1938 season will open technically for the Chicago Cubs tomorrow night when Manager Charley Grimm, nine players and Trainer Andy Lotshaw leave for Los Angeles, there to board a ship for the club's training base at Catalina Island.

A rookie outfielder, five pitchers and three catchers will constitute the playing end of the party. Herman (Coaker) Triplett, leading hitter of the Southern Association last summer, is the outfielder. His traveling companions include Pitchers Clay Bryant, Clyde Shoun, Leroy Parmelee, Bob Epperly and Walter Higbe and Catchers Gabby Hartnett, Ken O'Dea and Bob Garbark.

Gulli Sweeps Event Won By Randlett

Richmond Woman Tops Ida Simmons by Single Stroke.

Helen Randlett, Richmond's attractive bowling ace, scattered 1,183 pins in the fifth annual Lorraine Gulli sweepstakes at Convention Hall last night, but the last one was the most important as it enabled her to nose out Ida Simmons by a single stick for the top $85 prize and a loving cup in the 10-game event.

Mrs. Randlett succeeded Ethel Brewer as titleholder in one of the closest finishes in the history of local duckpin events. Only five pins separated the first four money winners with Olivia Schmidt, also of Richmond, trailing Miss Simmons by two pins, at 1,180, and Jean White, Baltimore, first block leader, finishing fourth at 1,179.

Georgia Hays, Silver Spring, rallied with 129 in the final game, but it was eight pins short of tying Mrs. Randlett and she finished in fifth place, with Caroline Hiser, of Hyattsville, completing the money winners with 1,152.

Ida Simmons, the Nation's leading feminine duckpin exponent, collected $40 for the second prize, with Olivia Schmidt collecting $25 for third, Jean White $15 for fourth, Mrs. Hays $10 for her efforts and Carolina Hiser $5 for the sixth place.

Out of the money block winners included Katherine Vick, Norfolk, 587 for high set first block; Gladys Lynn, Rosslyn, 145 for high game first block; Phyllis Wills, Richmond, 591 for high set for the final block, and Bronson Quaites, Washington, who cracked a 167 game in the final block for high game, a distinct form reversal over her previous efforts that include a 79 game and four games in the 80's.

Mrs. Randlett, trailing by 28 pins at the end of the first block, took the lead in the sixth game with a 156, followed with a 106 but then dropped to a dismal 83 and into fourth place. She finished 113 and 120, the eight pins in the final box clinching the victory by the slim margin.

Ida Simmons matched Mrs. Randlett's final game of 120 when a 121 would have tied, the blonde pinspiller splitting the pins in the final frame. Olivia Schmidt had 109 for a final effort and Jean White 112, when a 120 game for either would have copped the prize.

The 51 entries were the largest in the history of the event, the field including the top-ranking stars of Richmond, Norfolk and Washington. Billie Butler, winner of the inaugural event in 1934, topped the Washington entrants with a 1,149 total, three pins out of the money. It marked the fourth time in five years the tourney was won by an out-of-town contestant.

Portland Net Star Wins Florida Crown

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 20 (AP). Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., won the Florida West Coast tennis tournament singles title here today, defeating George Toley, University of Miami student, 6—3, 4—6, 9—7, 3—6, 6—2.

James' Mat Title Not to Be at Stake In Bout Thursday

As much was announced yesterday when Martinelli, in an unprecedented request for a challenger, asked that the match be made at catchweights.

Martinelli, it seems, weakened himself for his last stand against James locally in making the required 185 pounds on short notice and Thursday plans taking the mat at 192 pounds and thereby in a better position to upset the titleholder.

British Golfers Palm Beach Victors

Palm Beach, Fla., Feb. 20 (AP).—A pair of British invaders, Robert Sweeny and Mrs. Philip Hill, captured the Everglades Club mixed doubles golf title today with a 3-and-2 victory over Tommy Goodwin, of Monroe, N. Y., and Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., in the finals.

Mrs. Hill, London star, produced the most spectacular shot of the match when she chipped in from 50 feet on the 15th hole. Sweeny, British amateur champion, shot near perfect golf all the way.

Berger Rudd Captures Ski Title; Breaks Mark

Brattleboro, Vt., Feb. 20 (AP).—Berger Ruud, of Norway, leaped 216 feet to win the national ski jumping championship and break the Brattleboro Outing Club's course record today in a driving snowstorm.

With a fast track to give him speed before the take-off, Ruud nosed out Sigurd Ulland, of Lake Tahoe, Calif., who soared to second place with a jump of 214 feet.

Old Westbury Four Trims Californians

Los Angeles, Feb. 20 (AP).—The Old Westbury polo team defeated a stubborn Southern California foursome today, 8 to 7, at Midwick Country Club. It was the first of a three-match series, and it attracted 5,000 fans.

Stewart Iglehart was high point man in the match, scoring six of the victors' points. Several of them were the result of expert feeding by his teammate, Cecil Smith.

Columbus U. Will Honor Old Boxers

Former Explorers to See Matches Tuesday With Citadel.

Captains and former fighting favorites who helped compile Columbus University's amazing record of 22 victories and 2 draws while remaining undefeated since 1931, will be assembled at ringside tomorrow night when the explorers face The Citadel at Turner's Arena. First bout is scheduled for 8:15.

The athletic homecoming, scheduled as a testimonial to a team which is rapidly forging to national recognition, will include special features arranged by Dean John R. Fitzpatrick, who introduced boxing at Columbus.

Old time heroes such as Mike Tardugno, Gus Mirman, Leo Shub, Herbie Ginsberg, Harry Allen and Bobby Rawson will be introduced from the ring and will contribute to the prebattle ceremonies.

A capacity crowd is expected for one of the outstanding collegiate matches offered here this season. Definitely established as the favorite to supplant Maryland as Southern Intercollegiate Conference champions, The Citadel may mar Columbus' perfect record.

The Citadel, which only last week won a stunning 5-3 victory over highly touted South Carolina fought the Explorers to a 4-4 draw last year and promise to make an equally good showing tomorrow. Losing only to Army last season, the Southerners have annexed four triumphs, one draw, and but one loss against stiff opposition in the present campaign.

Included among The Citadel's victims are, beside South Carolina, the University of Tennessee, 7½ to ½; Presbyterian, 8 to 0; University of North Carolina, 5 to 3. A 4-4 draw was recorded with Clemson's fiery Tigers, while the only setback was a 3½ to 2½ raversal at the hands of the University of Georgia.

To date Columbus has defeated DeSales College, 8 to 0, and Appalachian, 5-3, in its only starts.

The pairings:

Navy Awaits Army Quint

Annual Service Clash Scheduled Saturday.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 20.—Though Navy athletes will be active in many lines during the week, the main interest will center in the preparations of the basketball team for the fifteenth annual game with the Army five, to be played at West Point on Saturday. The record now stands eight wins for the Navy and six for the Army.

Coach John Wilson is not counting at all upon the services of big Frank Lynch, whose knee was injured in practice three weeks ago and who has not played since, and will use either George Ghesquire or Bill Ingram at center.

Against Catholic Saturday, Ghesquiere played forward with Capt. Alan McFarland, with Ingram at center, and Bob Laney and Jack Mansfield at the guards.

Wilson will also try Bob Laney at forward, in which case Ghesquiere will go back to center and Ingram to guard, or Bob Gillette, the wee District lad, may be at forward, with Laney and Mansfield at the guards and Ingram in reserve for either position.

With the basketball team looking only to the Army game, a gym match with Dartmouth will take the place of the usual court game on Wednesday afternoon.

Three Navy teams, besides basketball, will contest away from home next Saturday, but leave sufficient athletes at Annapolis to present a local card of some interest.

The wrestling team will meet the grapplers of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia and the rifle team has a small bore match with Massachusetts Tech at Cambridge. Coach Earl Thompson will take a big squad of track men to North Carolina for the Southern Conference championships.

The varsity events at Annapolis Saturday are swimming with Princeton and fencing with Columbia. The Plebes have an unusually large and varied bill, including rifle with McKinley High School of Washington, fencing with the Columbia freshmen, swimming with Staunton Military Academy, gymnastics with Union Hill High School of Union Hill, N. J., and wrestling with Mercersburg.

Louis Faces A Confident Foe in Mann

Bout Wednesday Heads Week; Two Other Champs Busy.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 20.—The Brown Bomber unlimbers his heavy artillery for fresh target practice on Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden when Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis shuffles out of his corner against Connecticut's Nathan Mann in a 15-round title bout.

It is Dead-pan Joe's first title defense since he outpointed Tommy Farr over the same route last August. It also is the first indoor heavyweight championship match since Jack Dempsey fought Bill Brennan in the old Garden 18 years ago.

The bout would be distinctive for that, if for no other reason. But there are other reasons.

Though Louis has been a 5-to-1 and 6-to-1 favorite during recent weeks, and even may go into the ring at those odds, there are those who believe the dusky dynamiter is biting off a large chunk of his own pet explosive. That impression has been spread around largely by a one-man campaign by Mann himself.

Mann Plans Title Defense.

The New Haven, Conn., farmer boy, who has beaten Steve Dudas, Gunnar Barlund, Maurice Strickland, Charley Massera, Abe Feldman, Bob Pastor and Tiger Roy Williams since December, 1936, has expressed great confidence in himself all through his training siege at Summit, N. J. He has gone farther than that by outlining his plans for defending the title.

The majority of critics, however, regard this as just another, possibly slightly tough "tune-up" bout before Louis defends the championship outdoors against Max Schmeling this summer.

To those interested in repeating history, it might be noted parenthetically that Mann was a preliminary fighter on the Louis-Braddock card. The record shows that Gene Tunney filled a similar role the night Dempsey fought Carpentier, and that Braddock was in the same soft spot when Max Baer won the title from Primo Carnera.

Two Other Champs Busy.

He is, however, the only one laying his title on the line. Featherweight king Henry Armstrong meets Everett (Young) Rightmire in a Chicago nontitle ten-rounder Friday night. Lightweight Champ Lou Ambers battles Lou Jallos, of Cleveland, at Richmond, Va., Monday in another overnight ten, and Fred Apostoli, "uncrowned king" of the middleweights, meets Young Corbett, former welterweight titleholder, at San Francisco Tuesday night.

The Apostoli-Corbett scrap also is a ten.

Jack Kearns Likes Chances of Mann

Summit, N. J., Feb. 20 (AP).—Jack Kearns, who piloted Jack Dempsey to the world heavyweight championship, today tabbed Nathan Mann as a genuine threat to Joe Louis' heavy title when they meet at Madison Square Garden Wednesday night.

Kearns said the 5-1 odds favoring Louis were "screwy," after watching Mann box six rounds with two sparring partners. He said, "Mann looks so much like Dempsey, in the good old days, that he may surprise everyone and send Louis to the hospital."

Fort Hill Bows.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 20.—Scoring 13 points in the nal quarter and holding Fort Hill High School, of Cumberland, Md., to a single eld goals, Martinsburg turned in a 33-30 victory here Friday night.

Dear Al: Selections at Hialeah Park.

While racing circles have been waiting around to pick up the "dead" word comes from New England that there isn't going to be any war over racing dates. "Rumors of a possible war in this section over racing dates are positively unfounded," James E. Dooley, prexy of Narragansett Park, is quoted as saying. "We are too much interested in horse racing, primarily as a sport and secondarily as a business, to be a party to anything that would injure its future prospects. While the spring meeting has not yet been entirely abandoned, negotiations still being under way with the management of Suffolk Downs, my associates and I have prepared an alternative schedule for the 1938 season, calling for two meets, summer and fall." It has been rumored that a State war existed and the prediction was that it meant the early demise of racing in New England. I like that announcement by Pimlico that the Billy Barton Steeplechase will not be discontinued this spring. Due to the removal of the infield hill, Pimlico can't have any jumping races until next fall. The Billy Barton will be contested at the Radnor race meeting at Berwyn, Pa., May 14. It is an interesting event and it is better that the continuity of the race be unbroken. Since the Billy Barton was first run in 1928, Somerville horses have won it four times. The race was named for Billy Barton, famous steeplechaser. The open winter around Washington makes the stay-at-home horses mighty dangerous for the spring meetings. They probably will be ready to crack down at the first asking and may embarrass some of the stars that will flock in from Florida and California. BILL.

First race—Spanish Bunt seems capable of turning back the juveniles gathered for the first race. Darby Dean has worked well and may be a keen factor. Gay Casino, with Roberts to do the booting, deserves a money rating.

Second race—Maxine, in light and with young Sammy Williams in the saddle, should take down the major honors in a field of this sort. Greenski to hold Spindletop safe in the battle for the place award.

Third race—Sure Lad isn't quite as good as his name implies but appears well suited by conditions in this field. I'm going to string along. Irish Oak, a recent winner for us, is dangerous. Early Evening to keep the other in hand.

Fourth race—Sachem is one of the most improved horses on the grounds. Looms as the favorite in this group and any price will be a good one. Absconder and Light to fill out the money bracket.

Fifth race—Faust's last was a beaut and he needs only to run back to that effort to make it two in a row. My Kin and Aglow are sharp now and probably will chase the top one to the imaginary wire.

Sixth race—Pernie, with Wayne Wright in the saddle, should do a lot of running in this sprint. I believe this one can take the measure of Roar. The latter is fit and ready, however. Cal Rainey for the show end.

Seventh race—The route and the turf course seem to be right up Francesco's alley and I'm going to be with the former Whitneyite. Bow and Arrow and Indomitable appear to have edges on the others.

Hughes Begins 9th Yr. as Chief Justice Friday

Jurist, 75, Hasn't Missed a Day on Job Since 1930 Appointment.

By the Associated Press.

Charles Evans Hughes, who has presided over the Supreme Court during one of the most turbulent periods in its history, will observe next Thursday as his eighth anniversary as Chief Justice.

The 75-year-old jurist has not missed a day from his duties because of illness since he was appointed by President Hoover to head the court in 1930. He continues to set the working pace for his colleagues.

There is no indication he has any thought of relinquishing his duties. The only word that has come from him on the subject was a statement last May 20 that he had "no intention whatever of retiring."

Apparently the Chief Justice still adheres to the philososhy expressed on his seventy-fourth birthday, when he said:

"I'm going along without reference to the calendar."

During the present term that began last October, he has written 11 opinions in his own name in addition to 10 issues, anonymously on behalf of the court.

Sixty-five-year-old Justice Stone has written 11, 62-year-old Justice Roberts 10, and 81-year-old Justice Brandeis 9. The record for the other justices follows: Black 7, Sutherland (who retired January 18) 7, McReynolds 6, Butler 6, Cardozo (ill since December 10) 4, Reed (who has just gone on the bench) 0.

Wedding Waits on Weather

12 Safe as Plane Pierces Residence

Kannapolis, N. C., Feb. 20 (AP).—Twelve persons miraculously escaped death when a sightseeing passenger airplane plunged through a wooden dwelling here late today and buried its nose in the ground.

The large cabin ship, piloted by Karl K. Knight, Charlotte, carried three passengers. It smashed into the house in which Joe Hall, his wife and five children were entertaining a woman visitor. The plane did not burn. No one in the house was injured. Two passengers in the plane were cut and bruised.

Japanese Drive In Lunghai Costs 400 Lives Daily

Shanghai, Feb. 20 (AP).—The seven months of war in China have cost Japan 280,000 casualties to China's 1,000,000—in the estimate of informed foreign sources—and 400 lives a day is the price of the present Japanese drive to conquer the Lunghai corridor.

The southbound Japanese army which had been crushing the Chinese on the Peiping-Hankow railway just north of the Yellow River and at the western end of the Lunghai corridor shoved 50 miles westward from fallen Sinsiang on the heels of their routed foe and were reported today to have captured Posi.

Dance Committee Answers Clerics

Greencastle, Pa., Feb. 20.—In answer to a resolution adopted a week ago by the Greencastle Ministerial Association, deploring alleged "drunken revelry" at the recent President's birthday ball in Greencastle, those in charge of the affair answered the resolution with a statement yesterday.

The statement said:

"There has been much misunderstanding in regard to our President's birthday ball. There was no part of the entertainment or anything provided by the committee at the ball to cause drunken revelry. We all know that this ball is Nation-wide and open to the public. We have no power to discipline people before they come to or after they leave the ball. It is as unreasonable for the members of the ministerium to make the members of the committee responsible for the conduct of the people.

Current Prices In 2d Quarter An Aid to Steel

Production Holds Around 30% With Slight Change for 6 Weeks.

Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 20.—Announcement by the leading interest, followed by other producers, that its prices on hot-rolled products for second quarter would be unchanged from the current level and that on cold-finished sheets the recent reduction would apply has removed one cause of uncertainty from the situation, says Steel.

The present schedule of prices on hot-rolled steel has been in effect since March 5, 1937, being reaffirmed for each succeeding quarter. In that period, buyers have expected an increase at some times and a decrease at others. In recent weeks, it has been apparent that some consumers have held back buying as far as possible until the announcement had been made. Such tonnage as had been deferred on this account should begin to appear in the market soon. Some observers believe this will be of substantial proportions.

Slightly better buying of steel in nearly all lines is evident, consumers apparently finding demand for their products in a larger degree. This is not marked, but in the experience of some large producers, it is believed sufficient to give a larger total production in February than in January, despite the shorter month.

Railroads Uncertain.

Railroad buying, delayed by uncertainty as to the rate decision, apparently cannot be held back entirely and occasional orders for equipment are coming out. It is known that important tonnages of rails have been scheduled and it is believed these will be placed as soon as the rate situation is cleared.

Steel production has become fairly stabilized at a rate dictated by current requirements of consumers at a level close to 30 per cent. Variations from this level for the past six weeks have been only a point or two, indicating buying is steady at the low level. Last week the national rate advanced 1 point to 31 per cent as slight changes in schedule were made at various points. Pittsburgh moved down 2 points to 29 per cent and Chicago half a point to 24.5 per cent. This is equal to the lowest rate at Chicago since the first of the year. Youngstown moved up 6 points to 29 per cent; Buffalo advanced 2.5 per cent to 21 per cent; Detroit, 1 point to 48 per cent, and St. Louis, 7 points to 26 per cent. Operations were unchanged at Eastern Pennsylvania at 30 per cent, Wheeling at 44 per cent, Cleveland at 33, Birmingham at 61, New England at 27, and Cincinnati at 28 per cent.

Automobile assemblies last week were 59,100, or 1,290 more than in the preceding week. General Motors produced 21,560, compared with 20,950; Chrysler gained 800 to 9,850; Ford made 19,265, compared with 20,760 the week before and the independents assembled 8,425, against 7,050 in the preceding period.

National Biscuit Co. Gross $101,942,900

New York, Feb. 20.—The National Biscuit Co. earned both its preferred and common dividends in 1937 and built gross sales to $101,942,900, from $96,756,247 in 1936, according to a statement issued to the stockholders today by Roy E. Tomlinson, president. Net income for 1937 was $11,895,111, compared with $12,640,077 in 1936. The decrease in net income was caused largely by the expense of old-age benefit and unemployment taxes, together with increased costs of raw materials.

The amount available for dividends on common stock was equivalent to $1.61¼ per share, compared with $1.73 per share in 1936.

Security Offerings $6,121,000 for Week

New York, Feb. 20.—New security offerings in this market during last week totaled only $6,121,000, compared with $41,016,000 last week, $43,061,000 in the corresponding week of last year, $71,442,000 in the 1936 week, $18,107,500 in 1935 and $12,487,000 in 1934.

For the year to date the total is $204,577,175, compared with $782,014,550 in the like period of last year, $539,503,700 in the 1936 period, $159,656,000 in 1935 and $97,633,800 in 1934.

U. S. Gold Imports Smallest in 4 Years

The gold movement during the first 17 days of February was the smallest since 1934, receipts consisting of $169,000 from Australia and $275,000 from India, with net releases of $1,283,000 from earmarked supplies.

The Treasury on Wednesday revealed that the stabilization fund since the first of the year had sold for foreign account $9,093,385 gold in addition to the $5,000,000 exported some weeks ago to France.

Gloom Has Gone Too Far, Turn May Be Imminent, Babson Says

Cites Performance of Retail Trade as a Hopeful Sign; Declares Advertising Will Help to Defeat Recession.

By Roger W. Babson.

Babson Park, Fla., Feb. 20.—Business sentiment is about as bad as I ever remember. I think it is even flatter than in the 1932-33 period. Yet, strange as it may seem, this is a good sign. America has pulled herself out of former tailspins. The turn has always come quietly and unseen while pessimism and uncertainty were at their peak. Today I am convinced that the despair and gloom of businessmen has gone too far. We may even be making the turn right now. Among the most important reasons why I think this is possible is the excellent performance of retail trade.

Industrial output has fallen like a comet, yet retail trade has held up remarkably well. January "clearances," while not quite matching the whirlwind 1937 season, were good. Merchants cut prices much more than usual in order to keep their goods moving. These recent sales have offered some real bargains and there will be more between now and the Easter season. Not only grocery, meat, department, clothing, furniture and shoe stores, but the big mail-order houses, are going after business "hammer and tongs." Variously, retail clothing prices have come down 5-15 per cent and retail food has backwatered about 7 per cent.

Many Fortunes Made in 1932.

This current period of industrial recession shows how sensitive the business cycle is. Each phase brings its own special opportunities. People with foresight and courage who bought securities and commodities and started new enterprises in 1932 have established fortunes. We have a similar opportunity today—in a smaller way. Right now cash is a "sale" and raw materials and securities are a "buy." Those who are buying and investing today are doing themselves a good turn. More who are buying and investigating today are doing themselves a good turn. More important, they are doing a service for their communities and the nation. As retail shelves are emptied orders shift back to factories and 'help wanted" signs are hung up once more.

Newspaper, magazine and radio advertisers are doing their bit, too, help defeat the recession before it degenerates into a major depression. For 30 years, I have studied the business cycle and have tried to discover how the peaks and valleys can be ironed out. I have always been convinced that one of the solutions is by the proper use of advertising. When times are good and business is booming, advertisers like to drive for orders. This is only natural. Actually, however, manufacturers and merchants should hold back in good times and build up an advertising backlog which they can pump out to maintain their sales volume and their employment in periods such as the present.

Advertising "Relief."

If all concerns in the same industry would agree to spend a certain percentage of their gross sales on advertising, this policy might be made workable. The trouble is that a few outfits would always back out of the bargain and take advantage of their competitors' programs. Two or three concerns can scarcely afford to carry the advertising for the industry. So, while the logical policy is to cut down on space when business is coming in under its own momentum and to boost sales budgets in slack periods, in practice the opposite happens.

The Government is pouring out money for various purposes to stimulate public purchasing power. Why not consider a policy of allowing business concerns to deduct any increase in their advertising and selling expenses from their tax bills during periods when industrial production is running below Normal? Depressions are serious only when retail selling stops. Most of our basic economic troubles today are not connected with production, but rather with distribution and taxation. Speeding up the flow of goods is where we must put the emphasis rather than on speeding up the assembly line. Space advertising can play a tremendous part in this program.

Advertising is to mass distribution

what the machine is to mass production. Right now, for instance, it deserves a good share of credit for the comparatively excellent volume of retail trade. "Sales" cannot move goods unless customers know about them. I think that merchants and manufacturers now realize this more than they did in 1929. Not only should purchasing power be inflated, but the will to buy should be encouraged. Advertising is the last item to cut in your sales budget unless you want to close up shop.

Cutting prices is just as essential as maintaining or stepping up your advertising quotas. Despite its early 1933 slap-in-the-face, purchasing power is still satisfactory although I expect that the year 1938 will average under 1937. Farm income may be down, factory payrolls may be lower, and there may be a sharp break in dividend payments. However, the drop in income on the average need not mean substantially less goods for everyone this year. Why? Because merchandise "sales" and cheaper food bills can go a long way toward offsetting the drop in the average family's income. If you give careful attention to your personal and household buying this year, I think you will come very close to matching your 1937 living standard.

Three Buying Rules.

I have three specific suggestions along this line for the months ahead. First, shop carefully for your food. Always stock up on "sale" days on your staples. Watch the clothing, shoe and other merchandise sales, although look carefully before you leap. Second, pay cash for your goods. Conservatively, instalment buying costs you 10 to 35 per cent more than cash. Third, make a single budget and stick to it! Remember, "a dollar saved is a dollar earned." There is no easier way to increase your income 10 per cent than by carefully buying all goods from tomato soup to Oriental rugs! Follow these purchasing rules and 1938 will be not too bad a year!

December Incomes 18.3% Below 1936

New York, Feb. 20.—The national income produced in the United States declined sharply in December to $4,842,000,000 from $5,349,000,000 in November and from the recovery peak of $6,426,000,000 in October, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute today. This decrease was much in excess of the usual seasonal amount. The national income in December was 18.3 per cent lower than in the same month of the previous year and it was at a lower level than in any month since March, 1936.

Drive to Free Idle Dollars Seen by Street

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 20.—A horde of idle dollars—ready to work for about the lowest pay on record—crowds the Nation's strongboxes to see if Washington's latest recovery-promotion moves mean more jobs for capital.

In Wall Street, where money flows in from the country and far corners of the world seeking employment, Washington news the last few days has been read as indication of a fresh Administration effort to stir stagnant credit pools into action. To the money-lending Street more work for dollars implies more work for men.

Running through the Treasury's modification of the gold sterilization policy, discussion of the Administration's price objectives and re-opening of the RFC purse for loans to industry, money-minded analysts saw one thread—a drive to unlock the expansive forces of a huge unused credit supply.

This was the portent many in the money center saw as they hung over the financial news ticker unfolding the Washington strategy last week for reversing the business downtrend. The decision to allow additional gold up to $400,000,000 to join the credit supply and emphasis in Administration comment on maintenance of low-interest rates, it was held, indicated Federal recovery doctors still looked upon cheap credit as a powerful cure for business ailments.

Ciro Terranova, Artichoke King, Dies Penniless

Ex-Millionaire Had Been Arrested 15 Times, Convicted Once.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 20.—Ciro Terranova, 49, one-time millionaire "artichoke king," died today at Columbus Hospital, speechless, his left side paralyzed and his fortune spent.

Arrested 15 times and convicted only once, for carrying a pistol, Terranova, according to Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine, had been "criminally, financially and physically impotent" for some time.

Some years ago Terranova was classed as a millionaire. At that time he resided in a palatial Westchester home, drove about in an armored car and wore large diamonds. Ten months ago, however, he testified in a White Plains court that he was "broke and living on borrowed money."

His police troubles began in 1929, when he was arrested after a dinner to Magistrate Albert H. Vitale had been held up and at which he was supposed to have been a guest. The holdup, police were informed, was "faked" for the purpose of obtaining from a Chicago gangster a contract signed by Terranova, for the killing of Frankie Yale and Frank Marlow.

Two of his brothers were killed by gangster bullets, Nicholas in 1916 and Vincent in 1922.

After the Vitale dinner Terranova was questioned about the "Valentine's Day" gangland killing in Chicago in which seven men were shot down in a garage, but no charges were brought against him. He was held, however, in $10,000 bail on charges of complicity in the holdup of the Vitale dinner but later was cleared after 18 witnesses had failed to identify him.

Bob Burns Says—

I suppose when you read the fan magazines, you can get a pretty fair idea of the crazy questions the stars have to answer when they are interviewed, but you can see by the answers that the stars have just about the same kind of a home life as anybody else.

The other day a writer asked a star how long he had been married. The star says, "Twenty-eight years." The next question was, "Were you ever struck by lightning?" The old actor says, "Well, I probably have been, but when a fella's been married 28 years, he forgets them little trifles."

Ortiz Pledges Arms Program For Argentina

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, Feb. 20.—President Roberto Ortiz of Argentina today made an inaugural pledge of faith in democracy, warned against international political entanglements, and declared he would build up the country's armed forces for safety.

The new president's statement was made in a speech to congress after six United States Army "flying fortresses" led a good will air pageant during the inauguration ceremonies.

After stating he would continue the general policies of his predecessor, Agustin P. Justo, President Ortiz said, "as a candidate I ratified my faith in democracy. That implied a solemn promise to respect liberty and guarantees of the constitution."

Discussing the international situation he said, "parties now are international and not national. For that reason leaders of political parties should meditate carefully before they bring for discussion in America problems which we happily do not have and do not expect."

"In present world conditions only strong people can maintain peace and justice," President Ortiz said. Therefore, he declared, "development and perfection of armed institutions and moral reserve of the nation" would be his special preoccupation.

As the new President rode along the Avenida Callao to receive the oath of office he was cheered by large crowds and women threw flowers upon his carriage from balconies.

Prices to Slump, Farmers Warned

Princess Anne, Md., Feb. 20 (AP).—A. E. Mercker, of the Federal Bureau of Agricultural Economics, warned farmers here that truck crops, mainstay of Eastern Shore farmers, "will sell (this year) at a generally lower price than last year."

"Growers should be very conservative in paying out funds for the production of truck crops," he told a meeting of farmers. "It is not expected that any improvement in business will be felt until late summer or fall."

3 Dead, 7 Hurt as Fire Razes N. Y. Tenement

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

National Symphony Orchestra plays a concert under the direction of Hans Kindler in Constitution Hall Sunday afternoon, with Ania Dorfmann as piano soloist. Program: Symphony in A major, K 201 (Mozart), Pianoforte Concerto in C major (Beethoven), Two German Dances, K 600 and 605 (Mozart), "Les Patineurs" (Waldteufel), "Unter Donner und Blitz" (Johann Strauss 2d), "Frauenherz" (Joseph Strauss), "Perpetuum Mobile" and "Kaiser Walzer" (Johann Strauss 2d).

To the very evident enjoyment of a large audience, Hans Kindler conducted the National Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the annual program of Viennese music, the order of the day being diversion rather than concentration. The heaviest item in the musical fare was Beethoven's C major pianoforte concerto, which has material for thought in the poetic largo, but is otherwise sparkling with the lights of gayety and excitement. With so much incitement to lightness of spirit, the auditors could do naught but respond with a heightened sense of well-being.

A newcomer to Washington, Ania Dorfmann played the solo part in the concerto with so captivating a manner as to evoke a most cordial reception. The fluent sense of her technique was no less marked in the soft tone-coloring of the slow movement than in the brilliance and clarity of the virtuosic passages. An excellently equipped pianist both in variety of touch and range of dynamics, she showed temperamental warmth and emotional sensitiveness to her reading. She left the impression of a sound musicianship bent more upon fidelity of interpretation than upon display.

It was pleasant to hear again the early A major symphony of Mozart so soon after its performance last Wednesday night. This delightful work of an amazing adolescent foreshadows the greatness of the last symphonies he was to write. Composed in Salzburg, the year after his return from Italy, when he was disheartened by the failure of his opera, "Lucio Silla," in Milan, it betrays no hint of defeatism in its glowing courage. If his romantic ardor has been cooled by the check to his ambition, one would never guess it from the energy of this music and the intensity of the themes.

One of the miracles of Mozart's music is its timelessness. The two German dances with which the second part of the concert began were written during his last earthly year, when the clouds of anxiety were thick about him, yet they sound as though they had come from the carefree mind of youth.

The poetic license which admitted Emil Waldteufel, the Alsatian composer and the idol of Parisian ballrooms, into the company of Viennese writers, was doubtless based upon the Straussian grace of his waltzes and upon the fact that he visited Vienna several times on his concert tours. "Less Patineurs" was certainly not out of place on the program.

One was grateful to Dr. Kindler for his selection of the relatively unfamiliar polkas by the brothers Strauss, "Unter Donner und Blitz" and "Frauenherz." So consistent is the repetition of a few waltzes by the younger Johann that the present generation remains ignorant of the family's accomplishments as a whole. The father and his three sons produced between them the remarkable total of 1,350 opus numbers, each of them being facile in tuneful waltzes, polkas, polka-mazurkas, quadrilles, cotillons and marches.

One missed from the program the presence of Eduard Strauss and Johann Strauss the Elder, who would have made the family circle complete, and one would like to have heard something by Joseph Lanner, the creator of the nineteenth century waltz. But as long as Dr. Kindler is at the helm of the National Symphony, there is a vista of Viennese concerts, and the supply of dances is practically inexhaustible.

Citizens May Seek Relief Rise Today

Delegates representing a diversified group of civic and welfare organizations of the District will appear before the Senate appropriations subcommittee either today or tomorrow to demand a $3,247,750 relief appropriation for Washington during the 1939 fiscal year.

At a meeting in the District Building Saturday of 150 persons representing churches, welfare agencies, labor interests and others, members agreed to fight for the appropriation "until the bitter end."

George J. Cleasy, chairman of the meeting, said last night no attempt would be made to have the Commissioners appear before the Senate committee.

Arkansas Floods Under Forecasts

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 20 (AP).—Rivers cresting at stages far lower than predicted held out promise today of early alleviation of Arkansas floods which have made an estimated 3,000 to 5,000 persons homeless in the last few days.

As no rain fell for the second straight day, flood control and relief directors said another three days of fair weather should bring a return to normal along the Arkansas and White Rivers, principal trouble makers.

"The crisis that had been expected is not developing. It appears river crests at most places will be 2 or 3 feet below stages forecast."

Col. Jones, Aide In Home Loan Bank, Dies at 60

Ex-Commander of 'Blues' Stricken in Hotel at Richmond.

Col. Harvey L. Jones, assistant to the general counsel of the Federal Home Loan Bank board, died suddenly in a Richmond hotel yesterday at the age of 60. He lived at the Wyoming Apartments, 2022 Columbia road northwest.

Commander of the Richmond Light Infantry Blues battalion for a period in the World War, Col. Jones had gone to the Virginia capital Friday to attend a ball given by the Blues in honor of Gov. James H. Price, the Associated Press reported.

He had appeared in excellent health at the ball and on Saturday. Shortly after arising yesterday he suffered a heart attack and died soon afterward.

Col. Jones was born in Tuckerton, N. J., November 27, 1877. A graduate of Princeton, he received a law degree from the University of Maryland. He entered private practice with a Baltimore law firm and subsequently became manager of the Chicago office of the Maryland Casualty Co. After serving as executive vice president of the New York Casualty Co., he joined the FHLB three years ago.

Col. Jones was inspector general of the Twenty-ninth Division in the World War. He had previously served on the Mexican border. Among his decorations were the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre. He also was a member of the Order of the Purple Heart.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Sadie Schlegel Jones; two daughters, Mrs. C. T. Smelzer of Pittsburgh, and Miss Cathryn Harvey Jones, of Washington; three sisters, the Misses Helen May, Charlotte Abbott and Edith Wynne Jones, of Baltimore, and two brothers, Leonard W. Jones, of Paducah, Ky., and John Wynne Jones, of Baltimore.

Anti-Lynch Bill Shelving Up Today

By the Associated Press.

Two men face victory or defeat in the Senate today when the question of shelving the anti-lynching bill is considered.

Signs pointed to a victory for Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas. He organized the filibuster of southern Senators which has kept the bill from a vote for 29 days.

But Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, leader of the measure's supporters, was not ready to abandon the fight for the bill, which has been before the Senate at intervals since June 22, 1937.

He is survived by two sons, R. Nelson Graves, of Atlantic City, and the Rev. Andrew Vernon Graves, of Marshall, N. C.

Poison Victim Fights For Life in Hospital

He was found unconscious in his third-floor bedroom by Irving Benveniste, a roomer, who summoned police and a doctor from Emergency Hospital. A note, the contents of which police refused to divulge, was found in the room, as were three empty poison boxes.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

'Redouble' Delicate Weapon.

Many players look upon the bid "redouble" as a sort of bludgeon, a weapon to be used only for finishing off an already disabled enemy. Actually the redouble may be used with much more subtle purpose. Consider South's use of it in the following hand:

South, dealer.
Match-point duplicate.

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 N T	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Dbl.
Redbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

A cold recording of the bids does not duly describe the situation involved. What actually happened was this: The first two rounds of bidding went off without perceptible hesitation on the part of any player. After South bid his three no-trump, however, North went into a quite normal huddle over whether to permit this contract to stand, or to go on to four spades. East could hardly fail to interpret North's huddle and, quite ethically, decided to induce North to change his mind by doubling the three notrump contract, which East, of course, could not feel even reasonably sure of defeating. Now it was South's turn to go in for psychology. He, too, could hardly be unaware of the doubt that was in North's mind over the choice of contracts. Just as East had attempted a strategem to drive North into an unfavorable contract, so South was entitled, without the slightest breach of ethics, to protect himself and warn his partner against East's nefarious design. This he could do in only one way—by redoubling. It should be noted that South took considerable risk when he redoubled; for all he could tell, the opponents could run at least one of the red suits after knocking out the Ace. But South was so sure of East's intention that he took this risk rather than let North do what he had shown signs of doing—namely, persist to four spades.

The result was highly satisfactory for North and South. West opened a spade, but declarer, by means of the successful diamond finesse, could lay the hand down for an extra trick.
